AMONG the many arrangements in connection with the coronation the question of accommodation for the guests of the King and Queen is one engaging the attention of officers of the royal household. Several large town mansions have been placed at the King's disposal, one of these being Brook House, where, owing to deep mourning, Sir Ernest Cassel will, of course, not entertain at all this season.

On the occasion of King Edward's coronation Brook House accommodated some of the royal guests, and, as on the former occasion, the American Ambassador and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid will offer the hospitality of Dorchester House. Several empty houses within easy reach of Buckingham Palace will be engaged for the few weeks of the coronation festivities.

The representatives of the great foreign Powers, among them the Crown Prince of Germany and the Grand Duke Michael Alexandrovitch, the representatives of the Tsar, will have suites of rooms at Buckingham Palace, and Queen Alexandra may entertain her guests at Marlborough House, among them her daughter the Queen of Norway.

The great State coach, with its panels painted by Cipriani, its wonderful gilt mountings, and a team of Hanoverian ponies to draw it through the streets, will not, after all, be one of the sights of coronation day, for the King and Queen will drive to the Abbey in a glass coach surmounted by a great gilt crown, the carriage Queen Victoria used on any occasion of State during the last forty years of her reign. The oscillating motion of George III.'s old State coach is too suggestive of a cross-Channel passage to be pleasant, and although all sorts of devices in the way of underpinning have been resorted to, nothing can really keep the body of the coach quite steady once it is in motion. As Queen Mary is by no means a good sailor, she still retains a lively memory of the ordeal of her first passage in the great old coach when she accompanied the King to open Parliament.

PONIES ARE UNCERTAIN.

The cream colored ponies are also a sore trial to those who have to do with them, for their tempers are very uncertain, and if anything upsets their equanimity no one knows what vagary they may not be up to. On one occasion some years ago one of the "cream colors" lay down and absolutely declined to budge until at last he was unharnessed, and the procession had to go on its way with seven horses instead of eight to the royal coach.

The forecasts of pictorial matters is busy with the question of what will be the King's dress when he goes to Holyrood. When the late King George paid his northern dominions a State visit the question formed the subject of long and serious debate. It was settled that His Majesty was bound to make an appearance in full Highland costume, and he did so, though to Drummond's "gillfriend" and Leigh Hunt's "plump Adonis" the kilt was confessedly rather trying wear. In the kilt, however, the Fourth George received his liegis at a levee in the old place. But that seems to have been his only appearance in "the garb of old Gaul."

There, as any rate, is a precedent. The present King George can wear the kilt with any Scot alive. And if instead of a field marshal's uniform His Majesty elects to wear that of an admiral at a function subsequent to the levee the variation of the precedent will be only right and proper. Things, no doubt, have changed somewhat since at a Holyrood Court the King "danced with the young, talked with the old and won the hearts of all the Scots ladies." Young and old are quite invidious distinctions nowadays, and Kings dance only in royal quadrilles. But with hearts for trumps the present King holds a pretty strong hand.

BRITAIN NOW HAS AN ATHLETIC KING

George V. Keeps Himself Very Active in His Daily Visits to Spots of Interest.

(Special Despatch.)
London, Saturday.

THERE is perhaps no greater proof of the immense difference between the courts of to-day and yesterday than lies in a recital of the daily doings of the present King as contrasted with those of his father. At this time of the year in the Edwardian era the Court circulars had only such items as chronicle as race meetings, automobile excursions, trips to Brighton, parties at Biarritz, &c.

In their place to-day one reads of visits to the National Gallery, the British Museum, the South Kensington Museum, garden suburbs, the General Post Office, and so on, to all of which instructive rather than amusing resorts King George is invariably accompanied by his Queen, whose interests are of a more serious nature than those of her amiable predecessor.

King George's recent reception of the English polo team selected for America recalls the fact that His Majesty was at one time quite a good player himself, and could hold his own with almost the best representatives of the two services. Altogether, King George, though by no means the biggest, is probably the most athletic monarch who has sat on the throne for many years.

Almost every form of manly exercise has been practised by him, and there is not the slightest doubt that every kind of sport will benefit greatly by his patronage and encouragement. Shooting holds the warmest place in his affections.

"I love a gun," he confessed recently, "but I am almost as happy when I am fishing the pools of the Dee with a long day before me."

RUGBY HIS IDEAL GAME.

Next to shooting and fishing, King George's warmest admiration is reserved for the Rugby code of football. Not long ago he expressed the opinion that Rugby was an ideal game for all ranks in the army and navy, and it kept the men "fit," taught them to stand hard knocks and made them realise the virtue of self-discipline. In his earlier days the King took an active part in the game and knew what it was to be tackled in deadly earnest by keen young opponents who were giving nothing away, even to the heir to the throne.

At one time he was also an ardent and consistent player of lawn tennis, at which he was more than a match, at any rate, for any other royal player. It is not generally known, however, that King George is not only a strong swimmer, but once saved a bluejacket from drowning. That exciting incident occurred when as a youth he went round the world with his brother on board the Bacchante.

Twenty-seven thousand pounds has been assigned as a grant-in-aid for the necessary alterations to Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle and Marlborough House this year in order to fit them for the King and Queen and Queen Alexandra. Practically the whole of these works are now complete, $400,000 having been spent for this purpose last year. Apart from the palaces in the personal occupation of the King and Queen the largest sum is to be spent upon Hampton Court again, $80,000 being assigned to improve the fire fighting arrangements there.

PRIVATE FIRE BRIGADE.

Some little time ago the chief officer of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade was invited to inspect the old palace by the First Commissioner of Works in order to decide what alterations and improvements were necessary. Acting upon his recommendation, it has now been decided to spend $17,500 in new appliances and precautionary measures, while houses to accommodate the members of the private brigade to be established there are estimated to cost nearly $5,000. Ninety-five thousand dollars is also to be spent upon Holyrood Palace, Edinburgh, in order to prepare it for the reception of the King and Queen next July.

Marlborough House has now been restored to very much the same appearance it presented when Queen Alexandra spent so many happy years of her life there as Princess of Wales. Many of her most treasured belongings have been transferred there from Sandringham and Buckingham Palace. She is not expected to spend very much time in London this year, and she does not intend to attend any public ceremonies, though she may make an exception in favor of the unveiling of the National Memorial to the late Queen on May 16, but no definite decision has yet been arrived at in this matter. After the memorial service for the late King Edward at Windsor on May 6 Queen Alexandra probably will remain in London for a week or two before returning to Sandringham, where she proposes to remain until she leaves on the Victoria and Albert for her customary visit to Denmark and Norway in the early autumn.

AMERICAN IMPROVES LONDON TELEPHONES

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

London is very much interested in the improvement of its telephone service, and has engaged an American expert to direct the installation of long distance lines between this country and Continental capitals. In fact, Major O'Meara, chief of the engineering department of the Post Office, is confident that soon it will be possible to hold satisfactory conversations between England and any city of the Continent not more than 1,700 miles distant. Major O'Meara believes that when these lines are completed London will be able to talk with Antigonish, on the Canadian Sea,

Imposing Ceremonial for the Prince's Investiture

THE SONS OF THE SAILOR KING WATCH THE LAUNCHING OF A LIFE BOAT

No Less Interesting Than the Coronation of the King Himself Will Be the Pomp Which Will Attend the Appearance of the Prince of Wales.

(Special Despatch.)
London, Saturday.

NOT less interesting than the appearances of King George himself this year will be those of the Prince of Wales. Especially is this true of the investiture of His Royal Highness at Carnarvon, in the very castle where was born and shown to the people the first Prince of Wales.

There are plenty of people who have seen a coronation, but no one living has seen a Prince of Wales invested with dignities of his title in his own principality.

The ceremony on July 13 will not lack grandeur. The members of the Heralds' College for months have been digging into the obscurities of precedent to find a ritual which will serve for the investiture. They have slight records to go upon, their main bases for the ceremony they have constructed being that on the occasion of Charles I.'s investiture and of the fifth Henry at Ludlow. They have, it is stated, submitted a really fine piece of work to the King for his approval, and His Majesty is now going very carefully into it.

There will be a religious service associated with the ceremony, during which the Earl Marshal will support the King, having with him the Garter King-at-Arms, the Somerset Herald, the Chester Herald and one of the four pursuivants.

The Prince of Wales will wear a specially designed robe of cloth of gold, modelled on one worn by Charles I., and beneath will retain his simple cadet dress, which is, after all, the highest uniform he can wear. Before July arrives, however, he will be gazetted to the Tenth Hussars, in which case he will wear the rather showy uniform of that crack regiment.

What part the Prince of Wales is going to take in the coronation is being kept very quiet and is not yet fully decided. He may attend merely as a spectator, like other peers who are not yet of age. Were he two years older he would unquestionably be the first to pay homage to the crowned King, his father. His present Majesty did so ten years ago, when King Edward was crowned.

At present the intention is that the Duke of Connaught shall be the first to do homage. Here, however, the King may step in and declare, as he can do—and in these matters his will is law—that the Prince is to do homage first of all the blood royal.

Again the question of uniform comes in. He cannot wear a peer's robe, because he has not yet sat in the House of Lords, but one may see for the first time in English history the heir to the throne acknowledging fealty to his father, the King, in the uniform of a sailor lad.

ROYAL TRIPS ARE MUCH ENJOYED

King and Queen Give Much Pleasure to Their Subjects by Outings.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE King and Queen are giving all their subjects in London great pleasure by their frequent appearance in public. On almost any day there is a good chance of seeing either the King or Queen Her Majesty drives in the Park every afternoon unless the weather or more important engagements prevent her.

There was a general impression in the early days of the accession that the King and Queen were unlikely to dine out among their personal friends except at rare intervals, but it seems, on the contrary, as if they were inclined to accept private hospitality quite frequently.

At the same time few people enjoy a quiet evening at home more than King George and Queen Mary, and when their engagements allow they like to dine quietly by themselves in one of the rooms of the private suite at the palace. After dinner the King will sit in the boudoir and read aloud, while Queen Mary, who is never idle, occupies herself with the needle. The cult of needlework among fashionable women is consequently reviving apace.

INEBRIATE WOMEN HELPLESS SLAVES

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

Complete failure has followed the efforts of the London County Council to render effective reforms for women inebriates, though it is not, apparently, so much the fault of the council as the necessity for reform in the methods of dealing with the women.

A public health expert who has devoted considerable time to the study of the question, discussing the difficulties of dealing with women who have become slaves to drink, said:—

"It is very little use sending private women to reformatories unless you give to the authorities more control than they have in this country. At present [illegible] percentage of women in reformatories [illegible] methods [illegible] these lines [illegible] London will be able to talk with Antigonish, on the Canadian Sea, [illegible] cent of the total number.

AMERICAN BISHOPS SHORN OF POWER

Pastors Now Irremovable Except for Nine Causes, Which Are Named.

[Special Despatch.]
ROME, Saturday.—The Consistorial Congregation publish this week a decision of vast importance to all American bishops and parish priests.

Hitherto bishops could summarily remove pastors from office without specifying any reason. The present decision radically changes that by extending to America a provision of the recent decree of the Maxima Curia.

This summary power of the bishops no longer exists. Nine causes are enumerated which alone will justify the removal of any of the nine thousand American pastors, and existence of such cause must be determined not by the bishop alone, but by a special court consisting of the bishop with two priests.

The decision obliges all American bishops to constitute immediately two new classes of diocesan officials for the execution of the law, which applies also to all other English speaking countries.

WIFE IS SEEKING HER SEAFARING HUSBAND

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

A pathetic tale of a young Englishwoman who married an American mercantile officer who went to America and has not returned has been told to the American Embassy, which is making efforts to locate the missing husband.

The woman is Mrs. Harriet Rosena Robinson, and her story, which is substantiated by documents which the Embassy has seen, is that, falling in love with Albert Sewell Robinson, then third officer of the American line steamship St. Louis, she married him against her parents' wishes at the Registrar's office in Southampton on September 10, 1907.

GIRL SWIMMER IS ANGRY AT RULING

(Special Despatch.)
London, Saturday.

THE decision of the British Amateur Swimming Association to abolish mixed racing has not been received very kindly. "It's jealousy, that's what it is," said Miss Lily Smith, the well known swimmer, when asked for her opinion.

Miss Smith, it will be understood, is particularly affected by the new law. For the last five years she has regularly taken part with men in long distance races in England and France, and at present she is captain of the City of London Ladies' Swimming Club. In addition she holds half a dozen championships and possesses more than fifty medals. For the last four years she has regularly competed in the fifteen mile Thames Championship swim, only failing to complete the course once.

She is tremendously indignant with the new rule, which is to hamper her further activities in the amateur swimming world. "It is the most absurd and ridiculous law I ever heard of," she continued, "and the sole reason for its being passed is, as I say, jealousy. We women have been coming on too quickly for the satisfaction of some ungoodsportsmanlike men, and this is the result. You can never make me believe that there is a ha'porth of English sportsmanlike spirit in the Amateur Swimming Association after this. I think they make a boast of the fact that they started with five members, and they will finish with five if they don't mind. Every one I have met is protesting against this law—not alone women but men as well. It is the most unpopular resolution ever passed."

WONDERING AGAIN ON THE GIRL TOPIC

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.—No doubt inspired by recent marriages of American girls to Englishmen of high rank, the newspapers here are discussing the question, "Why does the American girl succeed in capturing and marrying so many noble Englishmen? Is it because she is more attractive than the English girl?"

In discussing the question Mrs. Yorke Miller, the author, says the Englishman is at first struck by the American girl's apparent selfishness—she is so full of her own life and individuality that she appears to be indifferent to his attentions—and this is a new sensation for the Britisher. Moreover, the American girl hasn't the "husband-hunting look" in her eye, and to her marriage is not the end-all of life.

Although, as I have said, the American girl is not a husband hunter, she is really attracted at once by the well bred Englishman, who soon falls a victim to her independence. All her life she has been allowed to associate freely with the opposite sex and she has none of the nunlike shyness of her English sister. She knows she is as good as (if not better than) the males of her family, and she lets the masculine persuasion know that she appreciates this, to her, indubitable fact.

The English girl's upbringing differs entirely from that of her American sister. In her home sons of the family come first, and she is imbued with the idea that her chief aim in life is to get married. Thus that "husband-hunting look" comes into her eyes. Eligible young men see it and seek other company.

A writer in the Daily Mirror says that when a man gets to know how an English girl she is just as attractive as her American cousin, but young Englishmen are afraid to become acquainted with her because after the first visit their lives are made miserable by "the matchmaking mother."

Speaking of the unapproachableness of the English girl recalls a story told by an American visitor to the Savoy Hotel revealing the same characteristic in the Englishman. This American, who is in his early twenties, has been sent over here to obtain a knowledge of English business methods, and was placed in the office of a firm the head of which is an old friend of his father. A few days ago the young American rushed into the smoking room of the Savoy with his face wreathed in smiles. When asked the cause of his good spirits he said, "I've been employed for six months by Mr. Blank, and to-day, for the first time since I entered his office, he noticed me and said 'Good morning.'"

LONDON'S PLAN FOR ALIEN ARRIVALS

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

PROPOSALS to create at Tilbury, about twenty miles down river from London, a quarantine station like Ellis Island, are contained in a report just issued from the home office.

The station is required, first, for examining aliens arriving by Thames steamships, and, second, for detaining those who are rejected pending the result of an appeal to the Immigration Board. The Port Authority is willing to give a shed at Tilbury Basin, to fit it up with rooms and to undertake the custody and feeding of the aliens; but it expects to be reimbursed for that as well as for a loss of $5,000 involved in the diversion of the use of the shed from ordinary traffic.

Accordingly the report recommends that the Port Authority be allowed to impose a small toll on each alien landed, perhaps five or ten cents. As genuine tourists may occasionally travel in a class requiring inspection, it is pointed out that the accommodation at the shed must be adequate for them. Further it is proposed that all immigrants taking steerage England on their way to America in one bottom

MONOCLE ADDS TO COST OF LIVING

Larger Tips Are Expected, but on the Other Hand More Attention Is Bestowed.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

IF you wish to be considered wealthy and obtain respectful attention in London wear a monocle. A friend who was ordered by a physician to wear a single eyeglass in reciting his first experience says:—

"The very first day I wore my eyeglass I found that the cost of living increased in ever so many little things. Waiters and cabmen expected larger tips. Tobacconists charged a little extra for their wares. More expensive goods were shown me in whatever shop I entered, and even the newsboys never attempted to offer me the usual halfpenny change."

It will be seen that a man with an eyeglass is apparently expected to live up to it.

On the other hand investigation developed that if one's expenses are increased by twenty-five per cent one receives fifty per cent more attention. A monocle seems to insure civility and immediate service. As a result of one day's investigation the following facts were established:—

An eyeglass, whether worn in the eye or hanging on the cord, attracts taxicab drivers, and one is relieved of the necessity of hailing them or calling after them.

On entering an omnibus the eyeglass made the other passengers instinctively move up and make room; it also distinctly improved the civility of the conductor.

The crowd in the streets made the path of the eyeglass wearer easy and pleasant. Policemen were conspicuously more diligent in guarding his passage across the road.

The waiters in a large restaurant competed for his custom; the manager himself helped him with his personal advice as to the choice of a table and choice of dishes.

The eyeglass stimulated a certain curiosity among the other customers of the restaurant and gave the wearer a feeling of superiority and distinction.

The waiters were also more attentive during the meal and exceedingly prompt in fetching the eyeglass man's overcoat and stick at the finish.

HIS "VANDERBILT" IS "ANDREW BILT"

London, Saturday.

(Special Despatch.)

At one of the side exits from old Drury Lane Theatre stood Mr. Alfred G. Vanderbilt looking expectantly at the line of private automobiles moving slowly at the curb. This was half-past eleven at night, and the performance of "The Sins of Society" had just finished.

One of the street boys who are always hovering around spied the American and singled him out for his own without, of course, the slightest idea of Mr. Vanderbilt's identity.

"Want a taxi, sir?" he asked, rushing up.

"No," replied Mr. Vanderbilt, "I'm waiting for my car."

"I'll get it for you, sir. Wot noime?"

"Vanderbilt."

"Wot noime, you say," asked the boy again, looking puzzled. He doubtless never before in his life had heard the name of Vanderbilt. It didn't sound quite right to him.

"Vanderbilt," again answered that gentleman in a low and unmoved voice.

A moment longer the boy hesitated, then a light seemed to break on his comprehension and he rushed up the street shouting:—

"Andrew Bilt's car! Andrew Bilt's car!"

THE TELEPHONE A NERVE WRECKER

So Says Berlin Banker, Who Receives Heavy Sentence for Harsh Words.

[Special Despatch.]
Berlin, Saturday.—During the hearing several days ago of a libel suit brought by the Berlin Telephone administration against Herr Ludwig Fraenkel, a banker in Schoeneberg, a suburb of Berlin, an attempt was made to give official standing to a new disease—"telephonic nervousness."

Some days ago, when the reply "Engaged" reached him through the receiver, he is said to have remarked that this was "an idiotic excuse." When a few minutes later he again asked for the communication and received a similar reply his language was quite unparliamentary.

At the hearing of the case Dr. Hoffmann gave evidence that Herr Fraenkel suffered from a nervous condition which made telephone difficulties an excuse for his language. The Court, however, sentenced him to pay a fine of 300 marks or undergo twenty days' imprisonment.

U. S. "GREEN GOODS" IN GERMAN CITIES

[Special Despatch.]
Berlin, Saturday.—American "green goods" swindlers are now trying their well worn schemes in Germany. A number of people in the large cities of West Germany have recently been approached by men who offered them marvellously imitated bogus bank notes at a very low price. After the usual preliminaries the dupes found themselves in possession of a bundle of worthless paper.

The authorities in the Rhine Province have succeeded in arresting five of the band at Siegen. The number of people who have been swindled is probably very great as the swindlers' field of operations extended from Diedorf on the Main in the south to Hanover in the north.

LIFE IN ARMY FOR RELIGIOUS CAUSE

Refusing Saturday Work, Seventh Day Adventist Soldier Feels German Law.

(Special Despatch.)
Berlin, Saturday.

THERE is every prospect that Private Naumann will have to serve in the German army till the day of his death because of his religious beliefs. He belongs to the sect known as Seventh Day Adventists, who forbid any work on Saturday, regarding this day as the seventh of the week.

As a result of his first refusal to obey his superiors, Naumann was brought before a court martial and sent to prison. Here he repeatedly disobeyed orders, until he was finally liable to five years and six months' imprisonment.

Even this had no effect. In the prison at Spandau he refused to do any work from sundown on Friday till sundown on Saturday. When brought before the Imperial Court Martial, the highest military jurisdiction in Germany, it was pointed out to him that under such circumstances he must pass his whole life in prison. Naumann replied that even then he would remain true to his principles.

On account of the importance of the decision from the standpoint of maintenance of discipline in the German army, the President of the Court Martial of the Empire, General von Linde, presided in person. The appeal of the prisoner was rejected, and it was decided that the medical evidence as to his sanity was such that he could not be dismissed from the army.

COST OF REMOVING SNOW IN BERLIN

(Special Despatch.)
Berlin, Saturday.—What it costs to be a winter city is shown by Berlin's expenditures for snow removal. This winter nearly half a million marks has been spent, but this is much less than was expended in 1909. This year's budget allotted 250,000 marks for the purpose, so that the amount has only been slightly exceeded.

In the course of last winter the snowfall of December 30 and the following days called for the employment of six hundred extra street cleaners. The use of snow ploughs resulted in a great saving to the administration, and through the employment of outside contractors the streets were cleared by January 8.

Two days later the "blizzard" of January 5 and 6, which left five inches of snow on the streets, required the employment of 1,100 extra street cleaners. On account of unfavorable weather conditions it was January 16 before the streets were cleared.

PRINCE HENRY AIDS SICK CHAUFFEUR

(Special Despatch.)
Berlin, Saturday.—Prince Henry of Prussia was driving in his automobile last Tuesday when Ernst Steger, his chauffeur, was suddenly taken ill. Prince Henry at once jumped out, placed Steger in his own seat, took the steering wheel and drove him to the hospital at Wilhelmshafen. Steger died several days later from appendicitis.

Prince Henry's family had the greatest affection for Steger, who had been many years in his service. His Royal Highness appeared in person at his funeral, accompanied by Vice Admiral Baron von Seckendorff, Captain von Usedom and Captain von der Knesebeck. Others who attended included deputations of the officials and employees in the service of Prince Henry in Kiel and Hemmelmark. Prince Henry himself laid a magnificent wreath on Steger's grave.

ORIGINAL "CREATIONS" MUST NOT BE COPIED

(Special Despatch.)
Paris, Saturday.—Dame Fashion is invoking the majesty of the law to protect her original creations. Actions for infringement of original designs have become so frequent of late in the Paris Civil Court that Mons. Morel, the presiding Judge of the Third Chamber, has delivered a judgment clearly defining the law as laid down by the act of March 18, 1909.

According to this decision, any dressmaker who has registered six months in advance of the season either models or detailed photographs of dresses will be entitled to claim damages from any one copying any of the original parts of such designs.

The learned Judge stated that when the customers of the great Parisian dressmakers paid high prices for their dresses and wraps it was on the understanding that the same models should not be purchasable immediately afterward at other houses for much lower prices. Should a model, shortly after its first appearance, be sold to all and sundry in the great departmental stores the customers of the leading couturiers who believed they were purchasing something original had good grounds for complaint.

SEEK NEW VIRGIN MARY FOR OBERAMMERGAU

[Special Despatch.]
Berlin, Saturday.—Oberammergau must find a new Virgin Mary for the next Passion Play. A few days ago, Fraulein Ottilie Zwinks, who played the part, was married to Herr Bauer, son of the Burgomaster of the village.

Herr Zwinks, her father, played the part of Judas Iscariot, and her fiancé that of Pontius Pilate. For a century the rule has been enforced that the rôle of the Virgin Mary must be played by a young unmarried woman.

Its cost is so trivial, and the cookery results it yields are so palate-pleasing, that you should never be without a bottle of

JUDGE BARRON'S HOBBIES.

They Are Hockey, Navy, Tuberculosis and Phonetic Spelling.

Judge Barron of the Kindly Heart, who has been busy in connection with the reinstatement of Grand Trunk employes, has at least four hobbies. One of them is the navy and his son was Canada's first naval cadet. In fact, his honor is so interested in naval affairs that he recently answered an advertisement published by the naval authorities of the United States. They proved so anxious to get "John Barron of Stratford" to enlist that he has been deluged ever since with communications setting forth the advantages of a life on the ocean wave in one of Uncle Sam's sea monsters.

There is only one thing which Judge Barron hates worse than he loves the navy, and that is tuberculosis. He has been a whole-hearted campaigner against the spread of the white plague. The cause has profited materially from his connection with it. "Connection," by the way, he would spell with an "x." That particular form of orthography is another of his hobbies. The fourth of them is the Book of Proverbs. It was only lately that he settled the trouble between the Toronto Railway Co. and its employes by quoting Holy Writ.

The judge is Toronto born. Many years ago his father was head of Upper Canada College there. His career as a public man, however, began in North Victoria, where he and Col. Sam Hughes used to fight for supremacy. And those were hot fights. The things that Col. Hughes has said about The Globe editor are mild as milk when compared with his campaign statements about John Augustus Barron. Mr. Barron, however, proved that he could play politics as well as he could play hockey—which was "going some," for he organized the Lindsay team and was an active member of it. He is remembered in the House as an unusually useful legislator, "a crackerjack" was the description which an old Parliamentarian vouchsafed the other day.

It was while a member of the House that Mr. Barron became most prominent in the hockey world, and participated in the genesis of the O.H.A. Hon. Arthur Stanley, a son of a former Governor-General of Canada, on coming to Canada, found hockey was a mere baby in the field of sport. He was captured by the many fine points of the game, and soon had a club organized at Rideau Hall, and in 1890 he urged the formation of an association. Barron was then a member of the House of Commons at Ottawa, and a hockey player as well. He talked to his friend Harry Ward, M.P. for East Durham, also a devotee of the new game, and they, with the Hon. Arthur Stanley and a few others, had a meeting called in Toronto, which resulted in the establishment of the Ontario Hockey Association.

Canning by Machinery.

Since so much has been written about the uncleanliness of canned meats, canned salmon has come in for its share of doubt, but a visit to a canning factory in British Columbia usually dispels all qualms. There was a time when much of the work in the factories was done by hand, but that time is past, except in the smaller factories. In the old days the fish were counted and put on tables, behind which Chinamen stood with large knives, and cut off the heads and tails and removed the entrails. Now beside the table a large machine called the "Iron Chink" does the work of many Chinamen. Then in days gone by Indians washed the fish and sent them on to be cut into pieces of a convenient size to go into cans. This work was done by hand, but now machinery does it all. After the salmon is packed in the cans, the cans are all soldered and are then put into test tanks. Here if any flaws in soldering are detected, the cans are set aside. If not, they are placed in a resort and subjected to a very high degree of heat which thoroughly cooks the fish. The cans are again tested and then conveyed to the labelling and packing rooms. Care is taken to insure cleanliness, and to prevent contamination of all kinds.

The Sacred Music.

It is only within recent years that the violin has been considered by the "unco guid" anything but a godless instrument. It was formerly associated with all that was unduly hilarious. Consequently, when a change was introduced, some years ago, by which small orchestras assisted in the musical part of the service, there was much disapproval expressed by the more old-fashioned members of the community. Rev. Wm. McDonagh, an outspoken old Methodist minister, who did not care for the orchestral frills, listened impatiently one morning as the violin, cornet and flute assisted the organ in the prelude. He arose to announce the first hymn, gazed at the musicians fiercely and, turning to the congregation, said, with significant emphasis: "We will now begin the worship of God."—Corner.

XI.—Hygiene of the Nose and Throat

By EUGENE L. FISK, M. D.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

TO the artist or sculptor the nose is an architectural affair, adding beauty and distinction to the countenance accordingly as it conforms to his ideals of line and harmony.

To the average man the nose is simply the organ of smell and an apparatus through which he breathes and occasionally catches cold.

To the physician the nose is one of the most important organs of the body. When in a healthy condition it is a veritable "guardian of the threshold," warning us against tainted food, sifting our air and destroying microbes of disease, protecting the delicate throat and lung tissue from cold, dusty air by filtering, warming and moistening it and finally exerting a most important influence in regulating the body heat.

Importance of Proper Breathing.

The nose is a very complicated and important apparatus, and any disturbance of its functions, if allowed to persist, is likely to have serious effects.

The most frequent cause of nasal obstruction is the growth of adenoid tissue in the roof of the throat just behind the nasal septum. This not only obstructs the nasal opening into the throat, but interferes with the proper growth of the septum and causes a deformity, "deviation of the septum," which is not apparent externally, but often seriously obstructs the nasal passages in later life. This adenoid tissue is very common, even among healthy children, and tends to shrink up and disappear when the cavity of the throat rapidly enlarges at the age of puberty, but the deformed septum remains and can only be corrected by operation.

The folly of allowing adenoids to remain until they atrophy and disappear is quite apparent. Not only is the child's breathing capacity and chest development retarded, but remote ill effects reaching into later life often supervene if the child is fortunate enough to survive the perils of frequent colds, bronchitis and consumption. It should be remembered that if the nose is obstructed by adenoids, a deformed septum or enlarged turbinated bodies mouth breathing results, and the air is not properly warmed and filtered before reaching the throat and lungs. Such obstructions are responsible for a vast number of throat and lung troubles.

Danger of Ear Disease.

The eustachian tube, leading from the middle ear, opens just behind the outer margin of the nasal opening into the throat. These orifices are often pressed upon by adenoid tissues, and proper ventilation and drainage of the tubes are prevented. This leads to deafness and sometimes to abscesses of the ear and brain.

The muco-purulent discharge from the nose so frequently present when adenoids exist is also likely to infect the eustachian tubes, with similar results.

If the nose and throat have not been properly cared for in childhood and deformity of the septum or obstruction from other causes exists expert advice should be sought and proper nasal breathing restored, if possible.

The tonsils are now regarded as useless and often dangerous structures. They should be removed, as a rule, when adenoids are taken out and especially when there is a history of frequent sore throat or tonsilitis. Enlarged tonsils are naturally irritating and obstructive, but often not so dangerous as smaller adherent or submerged tonsils, which collect germs and infectious matter. It is now believed that such tonsils are often responsible for attacks of rheumatic fever, and a history of such trouble should always call for removal of the tonsils, whether or not they have shown any evidence of disease.

PILSENER LAGER

"The Beer With A Reputation"
Is Better Than Any Imported Lager

"Imported" does not mean "better". It simply means "higher prices" because of the excessive duty.

It is a Government regulation that all Canadian lagers must be brewed only from barley malt, hops and water,—which cannot be said of any American lager.

O'Keefe's "Pilsener" costs about half as much as imported brands—and is their superior in every respect—in purity, in flavor, in wholesomeness.

Are you going to pay a higher price for a poorer lager —or are you going to insist on having O'Keefe's?

Why Newsie Lacked Cash.

A very small Toronto newsboy, who stands at one of the less important corners, numbers among his customers a lady who is much interested in such young merchants of the sidewalk.

One evening the youngster hadn't change for a dime, so the lady walked up to a more important corner, where she bought a paper from a Jewish boy.

"That little fellow down at the next corner hadn't change," said the lady.

"Aw, he hasn't any money," said the boy, with a smile. "He works for me."

Play Too Much.

At Peterboro, the school authorities complain of the children being allowed by their parents to give so much time to games and other amusements that they are seriously neglecting their studies.

Importance of Ventilation.

The sleeping room should be well ventilated, but the sleeper should be protected from drafts. The temperature of the living room should never rise above 70 degrees F.; 65 to 68 degrees is the safest point. Dryness of the air should be avoided by supplying moisture. A pan of water placed on the stove or cloths saturated with water and placed near radiators will answer the purpose if there is no furnace with a water reservoir attached.

Avoid dust and dampness in the home.

Avoid heavy upholstery, curtain hangings, carpets, etc., which only serve to gather dust and germs. Stained or polished floors, rugs and light washable curtains are far more healthful.

His "Turnout."

Clerkley—Isn't this earlier than your usual time for going home?

Barkley—Yes, but my wife said if I came out by the 3:45 she'd meet me with the carriage.

"Er—er—it's a baby and carriage."

One Marked Difference.

As we understand it, the difference between grand opera and the other kind is that there is very little of the former that can be whistled.—Albany Journal.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Completely Cured Our Little Boy of Fits."

A family can suffer no greater affliction than to have a child subject to fits or epilepsy. Many a father or mother would give their all to restore such a child to health.

"I am heartily glad to tell you of our little boy who was completely cured of fits. He commenced having them at 10 years of age and had them for four years. I tried three doctors and was told but all of them said he could not be cured, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills made a complete cure. He is now hale, hearty and gay. It has been three years since he had the last spell. I shall give Dr. Miles' medicines praise wherever I go. You are at liberty to use this letter as you see fit and anyone writing to me I will gladly answer if they enclose stamp for reply."

SOME GORGEOUS ROBES

Will be Worn by Peers and Peeresses —Instructions Issued.

Not a few of the robes which will be worn by peers and peeresses at the Coronation ceremony are of historic interest. In some cases they have been in the family for two hundred years or more, and, although somewhat faded when compared with the new mantles, are worn with the greatest pride by those to whom they belong.

The Duke of Norfolk, as Earl Marshal, has already issued instructions regarding the robes to be worn by peers and peeresses. They are to be of crimson velvet, and the capes are to be powdered with bars similar to the "powdering" on the capes of peers. By the depth of the edging of fur on the mantle the degree of the wearer is indicated. A baroness, for instance, wears edging 2in. of fur, a viscountess also has 2in., a countess 3in., a marchioness 4in., and a duchess 5in.

The length of a peeress's train upon the ground—yet another sign of degree—is prescribed by the Earl Marshal as follows: Baroness, 1yd; viscountess, 1¼ yd.; countess, 1½yd.; marchioness, 1¾yd.; and a duchess, 2 yds.

The order concerning peers is as follows: That the robe or mantle be of crimson velvet, edged with miniver, the cape furred with miniver pure, and powdered with bars or rows of ermine (i.e., narrow pieces of black fur), according to their degree, viz.: Barons, two rows; viscounts, two rows and a half; earls, three rows; marquesses, three rows and a half; dukes, four rows.

In addition, it is possible that Knights of the Garter, the Thistle, St. Patrick, the Bath, Star of India, St. Michael and St. George, and the Indian Empire will be allowed to wear the mantles which indicate their respective Orders. If this idea is followed out additional splendor will be added to the scene in the Abbey, for the mantles are of a very gorgeous description. The mantle of the Garter, for instance, is of dark-blue velvet, lined with taffetas. With this there is a surcoat of crimson velvet lined like the mantle and adorned like it, on the left breast, with an eight-pointed silver-embroidered star, within which is the red cross of St. George, the whole encircled by a minature blue garter.

The mantle of the Thistle if of green velvet, and that of St. Patrick is of sky-blue tabbinet, lined with white silk. The mantle of the Bath is red, and on very high State occasions the knights are entitled to wear crimson surcoats, vests and breeches of white satin, white stockings and shoes golden spurs, and a high-crowned hat with a plume of white feathers. The mantle of the Star of India is of light-blue satin, lined with white, and adorned with blue and silver tassels with a representation of the Star. The mantle and chapeau of St. Michael and St. George are of blue satin, lined with scarlet silk, the hat surmounted with black feathers.

AN EARLY RISER

King George is Hard Worker—Busy for Coronation.

King George is an early riser ,and a hard worker, especially during the days preceding his Coronation. After a brief walk in the grounds of Buckingham Palace, he sets to work upon the business of the day, so that by the time his private secretaries arrive he has many matters ready for their attention. The King has chosen as his work-room a large and airy apartment on the garden fronting the Palace, where he can gain charming views of the extensive grounds. His Majesty has now engagements of one description or another for every day until well on into July, and it will be a matter of the greatest difficulty to crowd any further appointments in-

DECORATING THE CITY

A Million Dollars Will be Spent in City of London.

At the approaching Coronation no less than $1,000,000 will be spent on the day and night decorations of the streets of the metropolis by public bodies and business firms, not to mention private enterprise. Judging by the enthusiasm with which the decoration schemes have already been taken up, the far from lovely city of London will be almost transformed.

While the details of the plans have not been definitely settled, certain leading features of the general scheme of decoration have virtually been adopted. It is probable the city will be divided into sections, with magnificent arches at the entrance to each division. The streets of the west end through which the Coronation processions will pass will be lined with rows of Venetian masts, connected with floral garlands, and topped by flags representing all portions of the Empire.

WELFARE OF THE NATION

Rests on Public and Private Virtue Says King George.

Expressing confidence that the prayers of the church will aid him in conducting the affairs of state, King George, replied to the Convocation address of the Archbishop of Canterbury as follows: "It will always be my endeavor, with God's help, to maintain and consolidate the foundations of public and private virtue which you labor to preserve and on which the welfare of my people rest. The knowledge that prayers are offered unceasingly by the church in my behalf strengthens me and increases my trust that the almighty will bestow blessings in the fullest measure in the solemn hour of my coronation and throughout whatever length of years he may be pleased to grant me."

With Prince Victor and Prince George.

CORONATION SALUTES.

Guns Throughout the Empire to Announce the Crowning of the King.

When King George is crowned, no fewer than 776 guns will sonorously announce the fact, and they will be so distributed as to give loyal subjects in the remotest corners of the Empire some chance of hearing them.

The Royal salute consists of twenty-one guns, though forty-one are fired from St. James' Park; and there are 19 military stations at home and 17 abroad that will thus honor the occasion.

Only on the birthday, accession and coronation of the Sovereign, and the birthday of the Consort of the Sovereign, in this Empire web of concussion brought into play. Royal salutes are fired only at the Tower and in St. James' Park on other occasions, such as the State opening of Parliament.

The number of guns to be fired in honor of great officials and foreign potentates is carefully calculated, and the honor is jealously prized. King Edward conferred an inestimable boon on the Nawab of Junagarh when he raised his salute from eleven to fifteen guns. But this has caused the dusky prince to be fiercely envied by all the other Indian princes, who are only "eleven-gunners."

Theatrical Programme.

First act of Lord Lytton's play, "Money."

Picture scene from Sheridan's "School for Scandal."

A scene from Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar."

Sheridan's "Critic."

Most of the leading actors and actresses will take part in this performance, which will open with an especially written prologue. Sir Herbert Tree and Mr. A. Bourchier are director and secretary respectively of the executive committee.

WORK ON NEW STATION

During the last month or six weeks Montrealers have been watching with great interest the progress being made on the new addition to the Canadian Pacific Railway's Windsor Street Station. Work on the structure has been going ahead steadily all winter and such good progress has been made that it is probable that the whole building will be enclosed by the middle of August.

IRISH ABSENT

They Decided to Hold Aloof From the Coronation Festivities

The Irish party decided to hold aloof from the Coronation festivities, according to their settled practice since the party was formed under Mr. Parnell in 1880, but they reaffirmed the loyalty of the nation to the throne. The following statement was issued:

"Members of the Irish party took no part in the Jubilee of Queen Victoria or in the Coronation of Edward VII. Since the date of these ceremonies circumstances have vastly changed, and the cause of Irish liberty is now on the eve of victory.

"It would be a great source of satisfaction to us if we could, as the representatives of the Irish nation, take our place side by side with the representatives of the other great component parts of the Empire at the Coronation of King George.

"Entertaining as we do the heartiest good wishes for the King, and joining with the rest of his subjects in the hope that he may have a long and glorious reign, and ardently desiring to dwell in amity and unity with the people of Great Britain and the Empire, we feel bound, as the representatives of a people who are still denied the blessings of self-government and freedom, to stand apart and await with confident hope the happier day for Irish self-government, now close at hand.

"We are sure our people will receive the King, on his coming visit to Ireland, with the generosity and hospitality which are traditional with the Irish race, and when the day comes that the King will enter the Irish capital to reopen the ancient Parliament of Ireland, we believe he will obtain from the Irish people a reception as enthusiastic as ever welcomed a British monarch in any part of his dominions."

CORONATION CROWDS

It is Estimated That Two Million Will See the Parade.

Some interesting statistics of the Coronation may be compiled now that the routes of the two processions have been definitely fixed.

The route to be traversed by the procession through London being over seven miles long, it is estimated that at least 2,000,000 persons will be able to obtain a view. The pavement area over this distance is about 2,906,680 square feet. Allowing two square feet for each person, it is computed that the pavement alone will accommodate 1,453,340 people. To this number another 100,000 may be added to include the crowds that will assemble at open places near Buckingham Palace, along Constitution Hill, Hyde Park Corner, and other points of vantage.

Troops to guard the streets, police, Territorials, Colonial and Indian troops will account for about 80,000, who will see the procession, or parts of it. Stands along the route, it is calculated, will seat 100,000, stands in shops and business premises 50,000, and from windows and balconies 200,000 will look on. The roofs of buildings, too, will no doubt find precarious accommodation for several more thousands.

Another subject for speculation is the probable cost of it all, for there is no event on which so much money is spent, and spent freely, by all ranks, from the great ones who assist at the actual ceremony to the humblest individual, than a Coronation.

The expenditure in connection with King George's crowning is hardly likely, now that economy is so much in the air, to exceed that of King Edward's, which totalled $1,786,425. This, of course, only comprises the State expenditure in London; the cost to the public of the Coronation celebrations in the United Kingdom and the Colonies will run into many millions of pounds.

KING GEORGE
When a little Highland Prince.

AN AUTOMOBILE TOUR.

British and German automobilists will meet in friendly rivalry both in Germany and in Great Britain during the coming summer in commemoration of the coronation of King George. The tour is for the Prince Henry Cup, and is a friendly and social match between the Imperial Automobile Club of Germany and the Royal Automobile Club of Great Britain. The object of the tour, which is not an international competition is to combine pleasure with a practical test of the touring capabilities of the competing cars. There will be no speed trials or timed hill climbs.

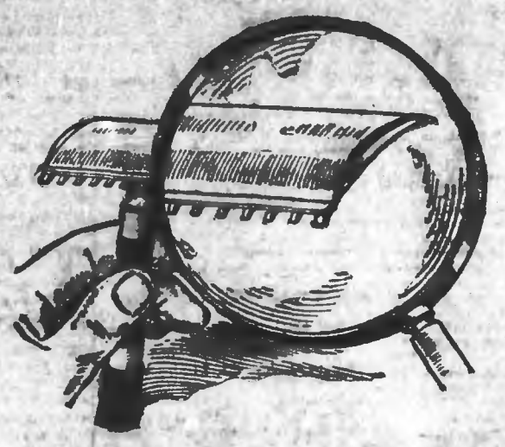
The route in England and Scotland, starting on Monday, July 10, is from Southampton to Leamington, Harrogate, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Edinburgh, Windermere, Shrewsbury, Cheltenham, and London. A banquet at the Royal Automobile Club, Pall Mall, will conclude the event.

BOUQUET AND FAN.

The Queen will be presented with a special bouquet by the Worshipful Company of Gardeners for her Coronation, and a fan of beautiful design and workmanship by the Worshipful Company of Fanmakers. The fan will consist of Honiton lace mounted on yellow tortoiseshell from India, which is peculiarly adapted for toning with the ivory tint of fine lace.

Mayor Geary to Go.

Mayor Geary, of Toronto, will be given a seat in Westminster Abbey at the time of the Coronation.



A Rigid Shaving Edge

The GILLETTE blade, thin enough to take a perfect temper, yet held absolutely rigid between the two plates of the frame, shaves as no other razor can shave.

You know how the thin, tapering edge of the old-fashioned open-blade razor vibrates till it fairly rings when it strikes a stiff beard. The thin blades of other safeties are free to do the same. That's partly why they pull and gash.

But the GILLETTE edge, the keenest and finest of all, is clamped so firmly that it cannot vibrate or spring away from its work. Note how the curved outer plate presses the blade down tight against the teeth of the guard, making the edge perfectly rigid. That is why it slips through the toughest beard so smoothly, quietly and easily.

The genuine comfort of the GILLETTE shave is a revelation. Why deprive yourself of it any longer ?

PRINCE EDWARD
Who will be made Prince of Wales in July.

First Coronation Order.

It is historically interesting to note that the first Coronation order was printed from a Rouen manuscript, but it is also found in a manuscript said to be the Pontificial of Egbert, Archbishop of York from 753 to 766. A striking conservatism has characterised the Coronation services of all British Sovereigns. In spite of civil wars and the religious confusion of the sixteenth century, the service—embodied in the Liber Regalis—remained the same from 1307 till 1685, when it was altered to suit the religious views of James II. At the Coronation of William and Mary considerable changes were made so as to render it impossible for any Roman Catholic to be crowned King of England.

Could Not Walk Ten Yards Without Resting.

WEAK HEART WAS THE CAUSE.

Mrs. Robinson Collette, Rogersville, N.B., writes: "I am now enjoying the best of health after having used your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I was troubled with a weak heart and was afraid to draw a long breath for the pain it would cause me. I could not sleep at night, and it was impossible for me to walk ten yards without resting myself. I cannot speak too highly of your Heart and Nerve Pills, for they are the greatest pill I have ever used and I can recommend them to all sufferers."

Thousands of people go about their daily work on the verge of death and yet do not know it.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart for the simple reason that one thinks it will right itself, but there is where the mistake is made. It is only when a violent shock comes that the weakness of the heart becomes apparent.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will soon produce a quick and permanent cure.

A WELSH JAWBREAKER.

Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobwllllandysiliogogogoch is a charming little village in Anglesey, Wales, and a favorite visiting place for tourists. There are many other charming little villages in Wales—all over the world, in fact, but none with a name like that. Llanfairpw., etc., means "the Church of St. Mary in a hollow of white hazel near to the rapid whirlpool and to the Church of St. Tysilio by the red cave."

It is declared that only a Welshman can pronounce the name of the village, but there is no harm in you trying if you wish. The first syllable, "Llan," is very simple. You must double back your tongue along the roof of your mouth and get ready to say something that sounds halfway between "clan" and "thlan," and there you've got it. The second syllable, "fair," is encouragingly simple. And if you want to go on and learn the whole name of the village the following rhyme may be of assistance:

At first it began fair,
Commencing with Llanfair,
Then started a jingle
By adding Pwllgwyngyll,
But was horrible, very,
To stick on Gogery
And simply ignoble
To run to Chwyrndrobwll,
Till it almost will kill you
To say Llandysilio,
With a terrible shock
At the end Gogogoch.

The inhabitants of the village and the postoffice authorities have shortened the name to Llanfair, P. G., while the railroad limits it to Llanfair.—New York World.

THE GOLDEN CAT.

The following story from the Persian manuscript of which a translation has been published under the title "The Glory of the Shia World," reads like a passage in the "Arabian Nights." It tells of a Persian at Meshed who had founded a college with wealth gained in a remarkable manner:

"One day a rich merchant asked him whether he was willing to work at a place to which he would be conducted blindfolded. Being a fearless Kermani and very poor, he agreed, and was led through many streets to a courtyard, where the bandage was removed, and he was ordered to dig a hole and bury gold coins and jewelry. This he did for several days, and, being searched before he left, he saw no chance of bettering his condition.

"However, one day he saw a cat, which he killed and ripped open. He then sewed up some money and jewels inside it and threw it over the wall. After this, when his work was done, he wandered about until he found the cat and not only secured the money hidden in its body, but also learned the position of the house.

"Its owner shortly afterward died, and the astute Kermani bought his house with the gold sewed up inside the cat. As the merchant had never revealed his secret to any one he became his heir and, in turn, when dying, bequeathed his money for the pious task of founding and maintaining a college."

Correct Way to Roll Umbrella.

A badly rolled up umbrella, besides looking unsightly, does not wear half as long as it ought to. The process of rolling an umbrella is very simply. The majority hold it by the handle and keep twisting the stick with one hand, while with the other they twist and roll the silk. Instead of this they should take hold of the umbrella just above the ribs of the cover. These points naturally lie evenly with the stick. They should be kept hold of and pressed tightly against the stock and then the cover should be rolled up. Holding the ribs thus prevents them from getting twisted out of place or bending out of shape, and the silk is bound to follow evenly and roll smooth and tight. If an umbrella is rolled in this fashion it will look as if newly bought for a long time.—Boston Herald.

A Bible Library.

Probably the finest collection of Bibles in the world is that in the library of the General Theological seminary in Chelsea square, New York. In the fireproof Bible room on the second floor are more than 1,200 different editions of the Bible, in all about 2,500 volumes, arranged on shelves and in glass cases. Of these 555 editions are in Latin, making 1,063 volumes. Of "polyglot" editions—in more than one language—there are 93, in 500 volumes. The most interesting of the Bibles is the Gutenberg volume, printed at Mogantia between 1450 and 1455 by Johannes Gutenberg, which has always ranked as a masterpiece of art.

Timber and Lumber.

"Paw, is there any difference between timber and lumber?"

"There is no necessary difference in kind, my son. They differ merely in degree or stage of development. For example, a man may be spoken of as good timber for some high office and yet represent nothing but lumber when he gets there."—Chicago Tribune.

Setting a Watch.

"The jeweler set my watch within a thousandth of a second when he gave it to me today," said the man with a new timepiece, "and this is how he did it:

"He has a clock wired up with the big chronometer at Washington. At 4 p. m. this clock was corrected to the thousandth of a second. At 4:05 he was ready to deliver my watch. His master clock has a 39.1 inch pendulum, so it ticks seconds. Each of the first fifty-five ticks in each minute is announced by a telegraph sounder in the clock, then the last five seconds are silent. The watchmaker rested a camel's hair brush on the balance wheel of the watch to stop it, then set all the hands, hour, minute and second at 4:00:00 and waited. When the silence of the sounder indicated 4:00:55 he got ready, and five seconds later, on the first tick of 4:00, he lifted the brush and the watch started. By looking at the second hand with a glass and listening to the clock announcer I proved their identicalness except for the time it took the sound to travel from the clock to my ear."—New York Sun.

Daniel Wilson, His House.

Dr. Daniel Wilson, afterward principal of the University of Toronto, used in earlier days to live near Lauriston, in Scotland. One day Dr. John Beddoe (who has written an autobiography) set out to find him. "Having," he says, "no clear idea of the situation of the house, I entered St. Margaret's lane, which I conceived must lead in the right direction, and, meeting a gentleman just about to leave therefrom, asked whether he could direct me to Dr. Wilson's new house. He looked hard at me and inquired:

"'Do you know Daniel Wilson? 'I do.' 'Intimately?' 'Yes, intimately.' 'Then follow this road till you see a house that looks as if it belongs to Daniel Wilson, and that will be it.' I thanked him and, following his advice, had no difficulty in identifying the house. It had a window which contained some tracery of a pattern which I knew Wilson considered peculiarly Scottish."

Forbidden Ground.

A visit of Gladstone to the Isle of Man is recalled by Agnes Herbert and described in her book about that interesting little speck in the midst of the Irish sea.

Mr. Gladstone had made a [illegible] across a small moaning of mustard; and his way lay through the "haggart," where the stacks are harvested. A strong, powerfully built Manxwoman stood throwing up the straw to the stack, using her fork as deftly and quickly as a farm laborer.

"That is very hard work, my good woman," the Grand Old Man is reported to have said graciously, "but you look well and strong. May I ask how old you are?"

The toiler hardly turned as she answered sharply:

The Arts of Asia.

It was Asia, through Arabia, which gave Europe the literature, the arts and the sciences which we have developed and of which we now boast. Gunpowder was probably invented in China. It was certainly introduced into Europe from Arabia. The finely tempered steel of Damascus went over from Arabia at the time of the Moorish invasion of Spain, and its manufacture was continued at Toledo. The coppersmiths of Bagdad supplied the world's market with their wonderful productions centuries before there were any industries in Europe. Weaving of silk and cotton had its birth as an industry in Arabia, and the weaving of wool was learned by the crusaders in the same wonderful country. Astronomy, mathematics, the mariner's compass—all came to us from the Arabs.—Argonaut.

The Tramp and the Dog.

Mrs. Suburb—Oh, my dear, that magnificent watchdog you brought home yesterday is gone!

Mr. Suburb—Eh? Did he break the chain?

"No, but an ugly looking tramp came around and acted so terribly that I let the dog loose, but instead of tearing the tramp to pieces he went off with him."

"Great snakes! It must have been the same tramp I bought him off"—New York Weekly.

The Particulars.

"Yes," said the clerk as he dipped his pen in the ink and prepared to fill out the blank. "Your name, please?"

"Amelia Whippleton."

"Nationality?"

"American."

"Married or unmarried?"

"Both—twice."—Chicago Record-Herald.

CROWNING A KING.

Preparations For the Great Event in England Next June.

It is no small matter to engineer the coronation of a king of England. A host of small details have to be looked after, and of some of these the St. James' Budget says: "In connection with the preparations for the coronation a special pile carpet for the nave of Westminster abbey is being made by a Glasgow firm. The foundation color will be royal blue, and the ornamentation will include emblems of the Order of the Garter and other heraldic devices. The pattern is on such a large scale that the design is repeated or matched only once in every six and a half yards.

"At the previous coronation special Chippendale chairs with rush seats were used, and small chairs and narrow stools of unpolished beech with cane seats were supplied in hundreds. Next June polished chairs with seats upholstered in silk will be used. After the coronation of King Edward and Queen Alexandra many of the peeresses who had been present were anxious to secure the chairs they sat on as mementos, and the office of works agreed to sell them at practically the cost price.

"The beech chairs and stools, all branded with the crown, the date and the word 'Coronation,' also were eagerly sought after and were supplied on similar terms, and it is extremely probable that this will again be the case and that the provision of the seating accommodation will entail little cost to the organizers."

HISTORIC OLD HOUSE.

Pioneer Structure in Which Martha Washington Was Born.

The house in which Martha Dandridge, who first married Daniel Parke Custis and later Colonel George Washington, was born is standing and doing duty today in New Kent county, Va., just below Richmond, on the banks of the Pamunkey river.

It is shown to be a pioneer structure by the nails, lumber and style of construction. The building is a two story frame dwelling, the walls of which rest on a brick basement wall five feet below and four feet above the surface of the ground. The walls are eighteen inches thick, save at the bases of the two chimneys, each of which is 5 by 6 feet, with an arch in the basement 6 feet high, 4 feet wide and 5 feet deep.

The lumber in the frame is white oak. The door and window casings are of poplar wood, and the weatherboarding is of hard pine. The nails were originally all handmade, but several years ago it was found necessary to replace many of them, as so many had been drawn and taken away by tourists as souvenirs.

The rooms on the first floors are 10 feet high, 20 feet wide and 18 feet long. The reception hall is 12 by 34 feet.—Christian Science Monitor.

Photography in the Air.

A Paris photographer has hit upon a new method of earning popularity and money. On the boulevards he has put up a poster inviting all who wish to send a novel photograph to friends to have themselves photographed in aeroplanes. The idea was born in the south of France. It has come up to Paris, and the photographer has more work than he can manage. He takes his customer in aeroplanes in the simplest possible way. In the studio is a background of the Place de l'Opera. In the foreground is a picture of the aeroplane flying, painted on canvas, behind which are steps. You can climb the steps, take hold of a bar, stand still, and the photograph represents you sitting in the machine—London Express.

Richard Brinsley Sheridan's Home.

The pick and hammer of the housebreaker are busy now on the old church house at Merton. Few buildings have seen such a whirligig of changes as this. In 300 years or so it has been a farmhouse, a residential mansion, a workhouse infirmary, a French school, a calico stenciling works and a poultry farm. It was once the residence of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, and Nelson is traditionally supposed to have been an honored guest there during his residence in Merton.—Westminster Gazette.

Last Year's Earthquakes.

The Dundee Advertiser in a review of scientific happenings in 1910 says that there were 104 earthquakes recorded by the seismograph at the Royal observatory in Edinburgh. It adds that "the most remarkable shocks recorded were in Iceland, Guiana, Algeria, Zanzibar and Glasgow. These 104 earthquakes under review merit the title large according to observatory statistics. If we are to include both large and small the total earth disturbances for the year are well over 250."

The Black Cross

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

CHAPTER I.

It was night in St. Petersburg.

The moon was high in the heavens, and the domes, crowned with a fresh diadem of snow, glittered with a dazzling whiteness. In the side streets the shadows were heavy, the facades of the great palaces casting strange and dark reflections upon the pavement; but the main thoroughfares were streaked as with silver, while along the quay all was bright and luminous as at noon-tide, the Neva asleep like a frozen Princess under a breast-plate of shimmering ice.

The wind was cold, the air frosty and gay with tinkling sleigh-bells. A constant stream of people in sledges and on foot filled the Morskia, hurrying in the one direction. The great Square of the Marliaski was alive with a moving, jostling throng, surging backwards and forwards before the steps of the Theatre like waves on a rock; a gay, well-dressed, chattering multitude, eager to present their tickets, or buy them as the case might be, and enter the gaping doors into the brilliantly lighted foyer beyond.

It was ballet night, but for the first time in the memory of the Theatre no ballet was to be given. Instead of the "Premiere Danseuse," the idol of Russian society, a new star had appeared, suddenly, miraculously almost, dropped from a Polish Province, and had played himself into the innermost heart of St. Petersburg.

The four strings of his Stradivarius, so fragile, so delicate and slim, were as four chains to bind the people to him; four living wires over which the sound of his fame sped from city to city, from province to province, until there was no musician in all the Russias who could play as Velasco, no instrument like his with the gift of tears and of laughter as well, all the range of human emotions hidden within its slender resinous body.

So the people said as they gossiped together on the steps: "The great Velasco! The wonderful Velasco!" And now he was on his way to Germany. It was his last concert, his "farewell."

The announcement had been blazoned about on red and yellow handbills for weeks. One Salle after the other had offered itself, each more commodious than the last; but they were as nothing to the demands of the box-office. The list grew longer, the clamourings louder; and at last the unprecedented happened. At the request of a titled committee under the signature of the Grand-Duke Stepan himself, the Mariinski, largest and most beautiful of theatres, had opened its doors to the young god; and the price of tickets went up in leaps like a barometer after a storm; —fifteen roubles for a seat, twenty—twenty-five—and finally no seat at all —not even standing room.

The crowd melted away gradually; the doors of the foyer closed; the harsh cries of the speculators died in the distance. Behind the Theatre the ice on the canal glimmered and sparkled. The moon climbed higher and the bells of the Nikolski Church rang out clearly, resonantly above the tree-tops.

Scarcely had the last stroke sounded when a black sleigh, drawn by a pair of splendid bays, dashed out of a side street and crossed the Pozhelief bridge at a gallop. At the same moment a troika, with three horses abreast, turned sharply into the Glinki and the two collided with a crash, the occupants flung out on the snow, the frightened animals plunging and rearing in a tangled, inextricable heap.

The drivers rushed to the horses' heads.

"A pest on you, son of a goat!" screamed the one. "Have you eyes in the back of your head that you can't see a yard in front of you?"

"Viper!" retorted the other furiously. "Damnation on you and your bad driving! Call the police! Arrest the shark of an anarchist!"

Meanwhile the master of the black sleigh, a heavily built, elderly man, had picked himself out of a drift with the assistance of his lackey and was brushing the snow from his long fur cloak. A fur cap, pulled down over his eyes, hid his face, but his gestures were angry, and his voice was high and rasping.

"Where is the fellow?" he snarled. "Let me see him; let me see his face. Away, Pierre, I tell you, go to the horses! A mercy indeed if their legs are not broken. A pretty pass this, that one can't drive through the streets of the capital, not even incognito!—Call the police!"

The other gentleman, who seemed little more than a boy, stood by the overturned troika, wringing his hands:

"Is it hurt, my little one, my treasure, is it scratched? Keep their hoofs away, Bobo, hold them still a moment while I raise one end."

He knelt in the snow and peered eagerly beneath the sleigh.

"Sacre—ment!" cried the older man, "What is he after? Quick, on him, Pierre! Don't let him escape."

The lackey moved cautiously forward, and then gave a sudden leap back as the boyish figure sprang to his feet, clasping a dark, oblong object in his arms.

"A bomb, a bomb! In the name of all the saints! If he should drop it they were doomed, they were dead men!"

The eyes of the lackey were bulging with terror and he stood riveted to the spot. In the meantime the young man had snatched out his watch and was holding it up into a patch of moonlight.

"Twenty past the hour!" he exclaimed, "and old Galitsin fuming. I'll be bound! I'll have to make a run for it. Hey, Bobo!"

As he spoke an iron hand came down on his shoulder and he looked up amazed into a pair of eyes, small and black and crossed, flashing with fury.

"Drop it!" hissed a voice, "and I'll throttle you as you stand! Traitor! Assassin! Your driver obeyed orders, did he? You knew? Vermin, you ran us down! How did you know? Who betrayed me?—Who?

The youth stood motionless for a moment in astonishment. He was helpless as a girl in that vicious grasp that was bearing him under slowly, relentlessly. "For the love of heaven," he cried, "Let go my arm, you brute, you'll sprain a muscle! Be careful!"

"Drop it, and I swear by all that is holy—"

"You old fool, you curmudgeon, you coward of an old blatherskite!" cried the boy, "I wouldn't drop it for all the world, not if you went on your bended knees. Bobo, yell for the police! Don't you touch my wrist! Look out now! Of all unpleasant things—!

"Bobo, come here. Never mind the horses. I tell you he is ruining my arm! — Hey! Help! You're an anarchist yourself, you fool! Shout, Bobo, shout!"

In the struggle the two had passed from the shadow into the moonlight, and they now confronted one another. The master of the black sleigh was still enveloped in his cloak, only the gleam of his eyes, small and black and crossed, was visible under the cap, his beaked nose and the upward twist of his grey moustache.

The youth stood erect and angry; his head was bare, thrown back as a young lion at bay, his dark hair falling like a mane, clustered in waves about his broad, overhanging brows; strange brows and strange eyes underneath. The mouth was sensitive, the chin short and rather full, the whole aspect as of some one distinguished and out of the ordinary.

They stared at one another for a moment and then the hand of the older man dropped to his side. "I beg your pardon," he said, with some show of apology in his tone, "Surely I must have made a mistake. Where have I seen you before? You are no anarchist; pray, pardon me."

The young man was feeling his arm ruefully: "Good gracious, sir," he said, "but you are hasty!—I never felt such a grip. The muscles are quite sore already, but luckily it is the left arm, otherwise. Bozhe moi (My God) I vow I'd sue you!—If it were the fingers now, or the wrist—"

He took off his fur gloves and examined both hands carefully, one after the other. A scornful look came over the older man's face:

"There was no excuse, my friend, for the way your troika rounded that corner. Such driving is criminal in a public street. It's a mercy we weren't all killed! Still, you really must pardon me, these anarchist devils are everywhere nowadays and one has to take precautions. I was hurrying to the Mariinski."

Hardly were the words out of his mouth, when there came the snapping of two watch lids almost simultaneously, and both gentlemen gave a cry of consternation.

"Oh, the deuce!" exclaimed the boy, "so was I, and look at the time if you please; the House will be in an uproar!"

The older man hurried towards the already righted sleigh: "Most unfortunate," he fumed, "and to-night of all nights! The entire concert will be at a standstill. The rug, Pierre, quick the rug! Are the horses ready? Hurry, you great lumbering son of an ox!"

The boy had already leaped into the troika and was wrapping the fur robes about his knees. "We shall put in an appearance about the same time, sir," he called back carelessly over his shoulder. "You won't miss anything, not a note, if that will comfort you. Hey, Bobo, go ahead! The concert can't begin without me."

"Without you," interrupted the other, "oh, what—you? Tysyacha chertie! (A thousand devils) What do you mean?"

The master of the black sleigh stood up suddenly and threw back his cloak with a haughty gesture. He was in uniform and his breast glittered with orders. His cap fell back from his face, and his eyes, small and black and crossed, his beaked nose, his grey, upturned moustache, showed distinctly in the moonlight. The face was known to every Russian, young and old, rich and poor—the Grand-Duke Stepan.

The youth made a low obeisance: then he tossed the hair away from his brows and laughed: "True, your highness," he said—"until we both get there,' of course. Your pardon, sire."

The Duke leaned forward: "Stop—" he exclaimed, "Your face—certainly somewhere I have seen it—Wait!"

RAGING HEADACHE STOPPED AT ONCE

SMANLY, ONT., Sept. 23rd, 1910.

"You certainly have the Greatest discovered Headache Cure in the world. Before "Fruit-a-tives" came before the public, I suffered tortures from Headaches caused by Stomach Disorders.

"One of your travellers called on me when I had one of my raging headaches and had my head almost raw from external applications.

"I hated to see any person coming into the store (much less a commercial traveller) and I told him very curtly that I had a headache but he insisted on my trying "Fruit-a-tives".

"I did so, with what I would call amazing results. They completely cured me and since then (nearly six years ago) it is only necessary for me to take one occasionally to preserve me in my present good health. I was 65 years old yesterday and have been a general store keeper at the above address for twenty-five years".

WM. PITT

Dealers everywhere have "Fruit-a-tives" at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50 or trial size, 25c. or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

The driver of the troika reined in the panting horses three abreast. They pawed the snow, still prancing a little and trembling, their bits flecked with foam. The youth saluted with one hand carelessly, while with the other he grasped the dark, oblong object that was not a bomb.

"Au revoir, your Grace," he cried. "You have seen me before and you will see me again, to-night, if this aim of mine recovers—" He laughed —"I am Velasco."

As he spoke the horses leaped forward and the troika, darting across the moonlight of the Square, disappeared into the shadows behind the Mariinski.

The Duke gazed after it petrified: "Velasco!" he said, "And I all but twisted his wrist!—Ye gods!

"Go on, Pierre, go on!"

The theatre was superbly lighted, crowded from the pit to the gallery, from the orchestra chairs to the Bel-Etage with the cream of St. Petersburg aristocracy.

It was like a vast garden of colour. The brilliant uniforms of the officers mingled with the more delicate hues of ecru and rose, sky-blue and palest heliotrope of the loggias. Fans waved here and there over the house, fluttering, flashing like myriads of butterfly wings. The stage was filled with the black and white of the orchestra and the musicians sat waiting, the conductor gnawing his long mustache in an agony of doubt and bewilderment.

Gradually a hush stole over the House. The fans waved less regularly; the uniforms and the more delicate hues whispered together, glancing first at a box on the first tier, which was still empty, and then at the stage door and back again.

Where was the Grand-Duke Stepan and where was the star, the idol, the young god, who was to charm their hearts with his four strings—for whom they had paid fifteen roubles, twenty—twenty-five until there was not a seat left, not even standing room, only the crimson-curtained Imperial Loggia in the centre, solitary, significant.

The time passed; the minutes dragged slowly.

Suddenly the curtains moved. An usher appeared and placed a chair. Another moment of silence; then a tall, grey-haired, military figure stepped to the front of the loggia and bowed to right and to left; his eyes, small and black and crossed, glancing haughtily over the throng. "At last!"—The applause was mechanical in strict accordance with etiquette, but there was a relieved note in it and the thousands of straining eyes leaped back to the stage, eager and watchful.

All at once a small door in the wings opened slightly and a slim, boyish figure strode across the boards —a mane of dark hair falling over his brows.

"Velasco!" A roar went up from the House—"Velasco! Ah—h—viva—Velas—co!"

Instantly, with a tap of his baton, the conductor motioned for silence, and then, with the first downward beat, the orchestra began the introduction to the concerto.

The young violinist stood languidly his Stradivarius tucked under his arm, the bow held in a slim and graceful hand. His dark eyes roamed over the brilliant spectacle before him, from tier to tier, from top to bottom. He had seen it all before many times; but never so beautiful, so vast an audience, such a glory of colour, such closeness of attention. Raising his violin, with a strange, dreamy swaying of his young body, Velasco drew the bow over the quivering strings in the first solo passage of the Vieuxtemps.

The tones rose and fell above the volume of the orchestra. The depth of them, the sweetness seemed to penetrate to the uttermost corner. A curious tenseness came over the listening audience. Not a soul stirred. The Grand-Duke sat motionless with his head in his hands. The strings vibrated to each individual heart-beat; the bow sighed over them, and with the last note a murmur and then a roar went up.

Velasco stirred slightly, dropped his bow and bowed, without raising his eyes. Then, hardly waiting for the applause to subside, the second movement began, slow and passionate. The notes became fuller and more sensuous. The hush deepened. The silence grew more intense; a strain of listening, a fixed eagerness of watching.

Suddenly, in the midst, the Violinist raised his head from his instrument, drawing the bow with a slow, downward, caressing pressure over the E string. His eyes, half veiled and dreamy looked straight across the House into a loggia next to the Imperial Box, impelled thereto by some force outside of his own consciousness.

A girl with an exquisite flower-like face was leaning over the crimson rail, her gaze on his, fixed and intent. The gold of her hair glistened in the light. Her lips were parted, the bosom of her dress rising and falling; her small hands clasped.

MASONIC HALL IN RUINS

HORNELL, N.Y., April 12.—As the result of a severe electrical storm that swept over Steuben County, the Masonic Hall in Howard is in ruins to-day. The hall was a two-storey structure. The lower floor was occupied by Ferris & Lyke, who conducted one of the largest general stores in the vicinity, and the upper floor was occupied by the Masonic organizations. The building, with all its contents, was destroyed.

The gale which prevailed at the time spread the fire to houses to the east of Masonic Hall, occupied by Mrs. Brasted and Mrs. Ancelhouse. Both houses were burned to the ground. A large barn in the rear of the Brasted residence, filled with farm products and machinery, was also burned.

The block just west of the Masonic Hall, occupied by the Bell and the Century Telephone exchanges, caught fire several times, but was saved from total destruction by the heroic efforts of the bucket brigade. The night operator, Miss Goff, who had charge of both exchanges at the time of the fire, showed remarkable heroism. The flames destroyed the wires of the Century company before the young woman could get a connection with nearby towns to ask for assistance, but despite the fact that the fire was roaring about her, the plucky young woman stenched the receiver of the Bell lines to her ear and calmly notified the outlying residents of the blaze and asked for assistance.

The town has no fire protection, but the residents—men, women, and children—formed a bucket brigade. Their efforts, together with the fact that rain began to fall, saved the business portion of the village. The loss will run into the thousands, only a portion of which is covered by insurance.

PROMINENT G. T. R. ENGINEER DEAD

Mr. J. Mulvihill Passes Away in Toronto

Special to The Examiner:

Local G.T.R. trainmen will learn with regret of the death of Mr. J. Mulvihill, the well known engineer, who was engineer on the Port Hope-Toronto train for years. The Toronto Globe gives the following account of his death:

The death occurred yesterday at 620 Bathurst St., Toronto of Mr. Thomas J. Mulvihill, for thirty years an engineer on the Grand Trunk Railway. He was born in Toronto fifty-one years ago, and lived there all his life. He entered the service of the Grand Trunk as a boy and rose steadily. He was well liked by his employers and popular with his associates.

Mr. Mulvihill was a strict Roman Catholic, a member of St. Peter's church, Bloor and Markham streets. He belonged to a number of societies, including the Knights of Columbus and the Holy Name Society.

He was afflicted a couple of years ago with a leakage of the heart. He did not suffer much, but lived a retired life, having been pensioned off a short time ago.

His wife, Catherine, survives him, also a son of sixteen, who is attending St. Michael's College, and a little daughter eight years old.

THE 57th REGIMENT MAY HAVE A WINDSOR TRIP

Probabilities are That the Local Red-Coats Will Spend Victoria Day in the Western Ontario City---Windsor Wants the Rangers and the Matter is Under Consideration

The Windsor Record says:

The present condition of affairs looks more promising for a glorious patriotic celebration to be held in Windsor on May 24th next. It is probable that a tactical day, similar to the one which was planned to have been held in London last fall, but was postponed owing to disagreeable weather, will be pulled off in Windsor.

Colonel Laing of the Twenty-first regiment, received a communication from officials of the Fifty-seventh regiment (Peterborough Rangers) last night, stating that they wished to come to Windsor to celebrate this summer on the national holiday, and would agree to pay all their own expenses, but that the city make arrangements to supply ground for the proper location of tents for at least 400 soldiers.

The suggestion of the Peterborough officials meets with the hearty approval of Colonel Laing and the officers of the local regiment, the matter being discussed at the adjourned annual meeting of the officers of the regiment held on the armouries last night. The message was received while last night's meeting was in session.

The communication has been forwarded to Mr. O. E. Fleming, president of the Windsor board of trade, and will be brought up at a special meeting of the board to be held next Friday, when the suggestion of the Thirty-eighth regiment (Dufferin Rifles), of Brantford, who also wish to come to Windsor on May 24, will be considered.

"I feel quite certain that if arrangements can be made for these troops to come it is a feasible proposition that a tactical field day, similar to the one which was to have been held in London last fall can be arranged to be held in Windsor on May 24th" said Col. Laing. "I wouldn't be surprised if Colonel Hodgins, D.O.C., of London, would agree to take charge of the whole affair and make it one grand day for Windsor. A number of other regiments might be induced to celebrate here."

Mr. Fleming, president of the board of trade, stated this morning that he thought the regiments certainly should be invited to celebrate in Windsor. Mayor Hanna is of the same opinion and states that he, with the members of the council, will cooperate with the board of trade and try and make the event one grand success.

TAFT'S ULTIMATUMS CAUSE EXCITEMENT THE MEXICAN SITUATION

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, APRIL 15.—All the capitol is this morning on the tiptoe of excitement, unusual for the day before Easter, following President Taft's ultimatum yesterday to both sides of the long drawn struggle in Mexico, coupled with the report of the landing of British Marines at San Quentin. Taft was in his offices early this morning have conferences with the secretary of war and other members of the cabinet. The feeling here is that the U. S. army may at any minute be ordered into Mexico. The Mexican Federal army in strong force is advancing on Agua Prieta, while Madero's insurgents are strongly entrenched. While Diaz has not replied to Taft's ultimatum, Madero has called attention to the fact that if a battle takes place and United States people are injured he can hardly be held responsible. There is considerable comment here as the result of Taft's recognition of Madero by sending him an ultimatum, as well as Diaz.

KNICKERBOCKER STORE ENLARGED AND REMODELLED

Another addition to the bright business places on George street has just been opened up, at Number 422.

Mr. H. Zacks, who has been the popular manager of the business known as the Knickerbocker, has now taken over the business himself and will conduct it as a cash bargain store, selling for strictly cash and one price.

The store has been enlarged and remodelled, making the third step of growth in the comparatively short time Mr. Zacks has been in business in the city. A new stock of spring goods has been put in, consisting of ladies' and men's clothing and furnishings, the house furnishings being now done away with.

New fixtures and a bright redecorated interior will make the cash bargain store, at 422 George street a very pleasant place for shoppers and render it much easier to handle the rapidly growing business.

PRESENTATION MADE TO A POPULAR TEACHER

A pleasant hour was spent last Thursday afternoon, when the Literary Society of Bridgenorth School gave a short programme. A debate "Resolved that Great Britain lost by losing the American War of Independence," was ably dealt with by the pupils. Carrie Crookshanks and Frieda Jobe took the affirmative side, while the negative was enthusiastically dealt with by Thomas McKee and Walter Jopling. During the programme, which consisted of a few songs, dialogues and recitations, Miss Martin, was presented with the following address, read by Pauline Heard.

Miss Martin—

Dear Teacher,—It is now two years since you came to this school and became our teacher. During that time we have tried your patience many times, sometimes by being so slow to comprehend the instruction you were striving to impart, at other times by our thoughtlessness and neglect of our studies. We did not mean to eb bad boys and girls, or to be disobedient, but we do like fun. Yet, through it all you have been very kind, and have done for us all any teacher could do, and did not punish us as often as we really deserved.

As a token of our love and esteem for you, will you please accept this little gift.

Wishing you a very pleasant Easter Holiday and a safe return to us, we remain, your loving pupils.

(Signed on behalf of the school)—
Marjory Sullivan, Frieda Jobe, Carrie Crookshanks, Hazel Black.

SPLENDID SERMON IS GIVEN ON THE "PASSION"

The congregation of St. Peter's had the pleasure of listening to a very able sermon on the Passion of Our Divine Lord, at St. Peter's Cathedral last evening, by Rev. Father Fitzpatrick of Ennismore. The preacher traced the bodily sufferings of Christ from the Garden of Olives to Calvary, and his mental sufferings and anguish through life, in a clear, forcible, and systematic manner. The injustice of the trial of Jesus, the cruelty of the persecutors, the sorrows of Mary, the ingratitude of the people of Israel, th instability and fickleness of corrupt, human nature, the enormity and heinousness of mortal sin, the extent of God's love for man, the necessity of penances and reparation in atonement for sin, were points dealt with, as following naturally from the subject of the discourse. He laid particular stress on God's love for man, being personal, and infinite, and beyond man's power of comprehension.

EASTER.

Easter marks the completion of the cycle of festivals of the Christian year. As Christmas marks the beginning of the great plan of Redemption, so Easter testifies to the culmination of the tremendous work. Easter, with the splendid hope and earnest of immortality it brings, falls conveniently with the resurrection of nature, and its entrance upon another phase of its endless succession of bloom and fruition, seed-time and harvest. The pathetic jeremiad, "It is nothing to all you that pass by?" receives it triumphant response in the fact of the Resurrection, which all Christians celebrate at this time. It not only gives hope for life beyond the grave, but gives us all a deeper and keener sense of the immortality of man that distinguishes us from the beasts that perish. It rolls away the stone of doubt from the sepulchre that imprisons our hopes, releases them and gives them wing into the realms of eternal life beyond the transitory realm of the grave.

THE TIRE BY-LAW.

The by-law to assist the establishment of the factory of the Independent Tire Company by the guarantee by the city of a loan of $40,000, on well defined conditions, is in the hands of the people, and the proposal should be considered on its merits and without prejudice, by the ratepayers. Everybody will recognize that one of the main conditions of Peterborough's continued progress is the acquirement of additional industries. The city authorities are considering the matter of acquiring power, largely for one purpose, that of having it available to supply the possible demand of the new industries. It is therefore evidently in the city's interests to encourage as much as possible the location of new industries here.

The by-law calls for the encouragement of the proposed industry by way of loan, which is virtually a guarantee loan o, in effect, the loan of the city's credit upon good and sufficient security. What objection to the passage of the by-law there is, seems to be chiefly directed to the question of security. The loan is to be advanced in instalments, contingent upon the employment of a certain number of hands at a given date, and repayable at the rate of $2,000 a year with interest at 4 1-2 per cent.—the figure at which the city, with its better credit, can effect a loan. The security consists of a mortgage on buildings and site, that must be of the value of $40,000 and upon installed machinery of the value of $75,000, a total of $115,000 to secure a loan practically one-third less in amount. The fear is expressed by some ratepayers that the value of the security may be only nominal, that the machinery installed and value at $75,000 may not be of that value .This is a matter that can be easily settled. The advice of an expert and the study of the invoices of the manufacturers of the machinery, will accurately determine the value of the machinery and the company would be foolish to offer machinery to be submitted to such a test without being sure of its value.

The security offered for the loan—with the advancement of the loan in instalments upon well defined and easily proved conditions—a first mortgage on machinery of buildings worth $115,000; its repayment in instalments at a liberal rate of interest for such a loan and the fact that one of the conditions of the loan is the possession by the company of a paid up capital of $150,000—seems to be ample, and to pretty well remove the element of risk. There is an element of risk in every business, large or small, but given fair conditions and the odds are generally in favour of success.

The Independent Tire Company will manufacture commodities for an industry that is only in its infancy of development, and is bound to grow. It will, therefore, have a market for its products assured, and this fact with reasonably good management, provides the conditions of success. It seems, therefore, evident that the establishment of the factory of the company in Peterborough will represent the addition of another to our flourishing industries. As a matter of fact, the encouragement Peterborough proposes, with the consent of the ratepayers, is practically formal; it really consists of the loan of the credit of the city, in order that the company may more easily finance its undertaking; for the city can borrow money at a much smaller rate of interest than any industry, no matter how solid and firmly established.

The ratepayers qualified to vote on the subject are invited and urged to consider the subject dispassionately, on its merits. Inquiries or objections and criticism are their rights, and show that they have an interest in the city and its progress. If this is done with open mind, the ratepayers will find that the weight of evidence is in favour of the loan proposed, and that Peterborough will be fortunate in securing a large industry with prospects of growth.

T. O. O. GIRLS' BAZAAR IS GREAT SUCCESS

The T. O. O. Girls (Thinking of Others), are worthy of great praise, for the noble work they are carrying out so successfully to-day. Ten little girls varying in age from five to fourteen years, undertook to hold a bazaar in the vacant store on the corner of Hunter and George streets, commonly known as the J. D. Tully Drug Store, and are proving more than successful in their undertaking. It is very gratifying to see little girls of happy homes, taking such an active interest in the welfare of those less fortunately situated. The proceeds of the bazaar will be given to the Children's Shelter. Mr. R. Gibbs has very kindly offered the use of a cab to convey the children to the Shelter next Saturday, when they will present the proceeds of the bazaar to the management. It may be stated to show how successful the little girls really have been, that the proceeds of the bazaar will amount to nearly $60.00, and that $20.00 worth of tickets have been sold for the Crystal, whose manager has kindly announced his intention of contributing to-day's proceeds to the Shelter.

The little girls wish to thank the merchants who so generously provided the articles for sale, also Mr. Fitzgerald who contributed a load of wood for the cooking department. The girls made a number of articles, themselves, for sale. Quite a large number of people had luncheon at the bazaar to-day.

REVISED U.S. TARIFF MAKES FREE ONE HUNDRED ARTICLES

The Democratic party of the United States is pledged to tariff reduction, and having control of the House of Representatives, is in a position to carry out its policy. The Democrats propose important tariff reduction, which will be of interest to Canada, especially at the present time. The Democrats propose to place upon the free list—entirely remove the duties—about a hundred articles. The following is the list of these articles, with the present duties.

Rye flour, free; present duty, 1-2 cent per pound.
Oatmeal and rolled oats, free; present duty, 20 per cent. ad val.
Timber, hewn, sided or squared, and round timber, free; present duty, ⅛ of one per cent. per cubic foot.
Shingles, free; present duty, 50 cents per 1,000.
Lathes, free; present duty, 20 cents per 1,000 pieces.
Sawed boards, planks and deals, free; present duty, 50 cents per 1,000 feet board measure.
Sewing machines, free; present duty, 30 per cent. ad val.
Salt in bags, sacks, or barrels, free; present duty, 11 cents per 100 pounds.
Plows and other agricultural implements, free; present duty, 15 per cent. ad val.
Bagging for cotton, free; present duty, 6 1-10 of 1 cent per square yard.
Burlap for covering agricultural implements, free; present duty, 7-8 of 1 cent per square yard.
Hoops, of band iron, for baling cotton, free; present duty, 3-10 of one cent per pound.
Leather, grain, buff and split, free; present duty, 7-12 per cent. ad val.
Leather, rough and sole, free; present duty, 5 per cent. ad val.
Boots and shoes, free; present duty, 10 per cent. ad val.
Harness, saddlery, etc., free; present duty, 20 per cent. ad val.
Beef, veal, mutton, lamb and pork, free; present duty, 1½ cents per pound.
Ham and bacon, free; present duty 4 cents per pound.
Other meats, prepared and preserved, free; present duty, 2 per cent. ad val.
Lard, free; present duty, 1½ cents per pound.
Buckwheat flour, free; present duty 25 per cent. ad val.
Cornmeal, free; present duty, 40 cents per 100 pounds.
Wheat flour, free; present duty, 25 per cent. ad val.
Barb Fence Wire, free; present duty, 13⅛ cents per pound.

It is difficult, at a glance, to estimate the advantages to Canada of such a large remission of duties. If the proposal is carried through Congress, the reduction will tend to add to the benefits of the free and reduced list under the reciprocal agreement. It will facilitate the export to the United States of many manufactured articles, including ham, bacon, and other prepared meats, wheat, flour, oatmeal, etc., now excluded from profitable export by the duty.

The Revenue And Surplus Of Canada In Relation To The Rate Of Taxation

(Toronto Saturday Night.)

Hon. W. S. Fielding, financial magician, continues to heap up additional receipts and additional expenditures for the Dominion of Canada. From the first year he took office the receipts showed an increase. In 1900 there was rather an unusual increase when the revenue for the Dominion for the first time exceeded $5,000,000. In 1903 took place an extraordinary increase of about $9,000,000, and in 1904 the revenue touched the $75,000,000 mark. In 1906 it reached $80,000,000; in 1908 $96,000,000; in 1909 took place a decrease of over $20,000,000, but this was made up for and surpassed in 1910 when the revenue exceeded $100,000,000 having thus in ten years doubled itself. Mr. Fielding's estimate for 1910-11 is in excess of $117,000,000 — and experience of the past shows that his estimate are on the safe side. The previous year he estimated that the revenue would be $97,500,000, and he hoped it might even reach $100,000,000. It exceeded that figure and now we have a jump of $16,000,000 in a single year. This is going some.

We all remember the criticisms which have appeared from time to time on Mr. Fielding's policies. Judging by the clamour of those who were opposed to him and the dire predictions of what would happen us if he were not compelled to call a halt in his general policy of lower average duties and wider trade relationships, we might have expected that by this time the country would be on the verge of bankruptcy. I find that the average rate of duty, since the beginning of the present century was about 16 1-2 per cent. of the total imports of the country. Previous to this we have to go back to the year 1879 before we find as low a rate of duty. From 1880 to 1899 inclusive, the rate was only four times under 20 per cent. and it ranged up to slightly over 22 per cent. It fluctuated considerably during the next five or six years, being from about 20 to almost 21, and after Mr. Fielding became finance minister it gradually declined until the end of the century. Since then, as I said, it has never reached 17 per cent., but there has been no trouble getting revenue.

The net debt of the country increases or decreases each year in proportion to the relation between receipts and expenditures less sinking funds. In addition to this it should not be forgotten that the population of Canada is constantly increasing and that a debt which may be onerous to a small population may be borne very easily by a large one.

In view of the probability that a surplus of $30,000,000 or more will be shown by the actual figures for the past year, one might with some reason ask if it is in all respects a wise policy to pile up a surplus of this character. Why should the tax-payer be asked to contribute more than current expenses? In asking this I am not offering any criticism of Mr. Fielding's policy, more especially as he raises the money not out of a higher tariff, but out of a lower one. In fact, his surplus under a tariff of less than 17 per cent on total imports is almost as large as was the entire revenue of the country under a rate of 33 per cent. higher before Mr. Fielding's time. The surplus for 1910-11, however, amounts to $4 per head of population, and I fancy that about 90 per cent. of the inhabitants could make better use of their money than could the government. It is not a good thing for government to have too much money. The high protectionist would probably suggest that if the revenue was so low under a high tariff and is now too high under a low, the solution for excess value would be to raise the tariff again. The free trade would suggest that the tariff be abolished. As things are, however, we would then have no revenue at all. The practical mind of the people would suggest that inasmuch as a low tariff has less heavily than a high, the solution would be to bring the average rate down till it produced the required revenue only, thus accomplishing the double purpose. The manufacturer, however, would oppose this, fearing that the duty might be reduced on his goods, thus reducing his protection. He need not be hit, however, because we were dealing in averages, and a lower average might be reached without even laying a hand on him. In fact, we might accomplish our purpose in harmony with the doctrine of even the political economist who thinks that taxation "according to ability to pay" is ideal.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

Yet were an equal poise of hope and fear
Do arbitrate the event, my nature is That I incline to hope rather than fear."

—Milton.

The day, on which her first spring picnic had been promised to my small pet, Rosalie, dawned wet and dismal.

The excursion was to be in the afternoon and the verdict handed down early in the morning by the foreman of the jury — in other words, Rosalie's mother—was "We will go if it clears up enough."

As a consequence an immediate consultation of the weather man and the weather was instituted.

From the last function Rosalie burst into the living room radiant.

"Oh, mother," she announced, "I'm just sure it's going to clear off."

"Why are you so sure, dear?"

"Why, because the wind's west and because I want it to do so."

Of course we all laughed at that last, and yet after all wasn't there more to think about than to laugh at in it?

I don't suppose Rosalie's radiant belief that the sun would shine "because I want it to do so," had any palpable effect upon the weather, but it certainly did on Rosalie.

I don't suppose it made the sun shine outdoors, but it certainly created a lot of sunshine in the house with Rosalie's shining eye and upward curving lips playing the role of the sun.

I only hope she continues all through her life to forecast events in that way.

I fancy that if she does there may be many conditions, less superhuman, than the weather that she may indeed influence by her belief in a happy outcome of affairs "because I want it so."

They who don't use it are doubly depriving themselves. First of its power as an inward magnet to attract happiness and second of its outward power to attract success.

For surely the man who is positive success must come "because I want it so," is far more apt to win out than he who will not hope.

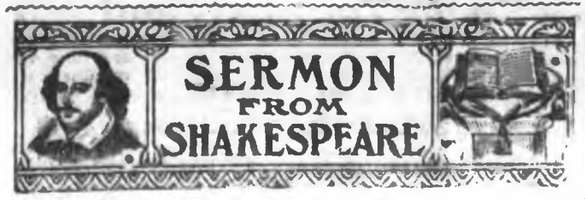
An emphatic denial of the declaration, "There's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will," an emphatic assertion of the power of each man to govern his own fate—these are the chief tenets of the new thought doctrines that are taking such a hold upon the twentieth century.

"Each man is the divinity that shapes his ends, rough hew them how fate will"—with all apologies to Shakespeare—is the modern version.

And in his shaping, surely man can have no better tool than hope, than a radiant belief that things must come out right because he wants them so.

Oh, by the way, I almost forgot to say that the sun did come out most gloriously and Rosalie had her picnic.

Ruth Cameron



(Copr. 1909, by Bradley-Garretson Co., Ltd.)

A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.
—Henry VI., Part II., Act III., Sc. I.

In the Sermon on the Mount the most striking of the beatitudes is "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." The heart unspotted so lives in the immediate presence of the Infinite that it fears no temporal evil. On ocean or on shore no harm of a daunting character can come to the man who lives and moves and has his being in the practice of righteousness.

A heart unspotted—is that possible? At any rate the founder of Christianity believed it was or he would never have given the advice to his hearers on the mountain side, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." It would be a poor reader who would give his followers an impossible task. An unspotted heart is not impossible, but in a world of self-seeking that condition of purity is not easily attained. The strength of Christianity lies in the ideal set up. The duty of man is not mere worship, the slavish performance of religious ceremonies, or the giving of alms; it is to aim at perfection of life. The man of honest, clean, merciful character is the man who shall see God. Thus the humblest and the loftiest have a chance. Intellectual endowments, physical strength, money, count for little. They all may be used for very impure purposes. Indeed, these very things make it more difficult for a man to achieve an unspotted heart, to see God. As Christ said to the young man of great possessions who came to Him seeking eternal life: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of God."

Shakespeare has crystalised much philosophy into the line:

"A heart unspotted is not easily daunted."

These words were uttered by the Duke of Gloucester upon his arrest for high treason. He was surrounded by enemies who sought his life but he had no cowardly shrinking from death. In the interests of his sovereign and his country he had kept a heart unspotted, and did not fear to give an account of his stewardship to his God. Shakespeare felt the need of impressing the truth of the text, and later in the play makes King Henry VI. soliloquise thus:

"What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted?
Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just.
And he but naked though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

In one form or another the same lesson is taught in every one of Shakespeare's dramas. As a moral philosopher—and he is as much that as is Plato—he could not but make it a centre of all his teachings. "As You Like It" shows that sweet are the uses of adversity; selfish hearts cleansed by suffering become noble. "The Merchant of Venice" and "Measure for Measure" teach that mercy is the noblest attribute in man; "The Tempest" that the "rarer action is in virtue than in vengeance." The shrinking from death expressed by Richard III. shows how his spotted heart dreaded the consequences of his crimes. Richard cried out:

"O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me!"

Let us look for a moment at heroes who have nobly lived and nobly died. Nelson, so far as national duty and his love of country were concerned, kept an unspotted heart. A more unselfish sailor never walked a quarter-deck. At Trafalgar to inspire courage in his captains and men he exposed himself to death. Abraham Lincoln was never a self-seeker. He pursued his course with an unspotted heart. He had one ideal—his country's welfare. Threatened by assassination, he fearlessly performed his daily tasks with no guard about him, with no breastplate save a heart untainted. Henry Ward Beecher in his tribute to Lincoln's memory magnificently tells why he was so dauntless:

"Dead, dead, dead, he yet speaketh. Is Washington dead? Is Hampden dead? Is any man that was ever fit to live dead? Disenthralled of flesh, risen to the unobstructed sphere where passion never comes, he begins his illimitable work."

That is why the righteous man is fearless. He is already living in eternity and the eternal part of his being, dynamite, poison, or the assassin's dagger cannot kill.

It is needful to cultivate a pure heart, a generous heart. Burns was never wiser than when he said that the heart is the part that makes man truly blessed—or he might have added cursed. It is the heart element in religion that makes it attractive. Love is of the heart, not of the brain, and love is the sum and substance of Christianity. It is not easy to keep a heart unspotted, but it is the ideal; and if integrity and honesty are practised in the immediate calling of a man, these qualities cannot but leaven his entire existence; if as a citizen he has an unspotted heart, as a man he is on the high road to perfection.

ANNUAL REPORTS

From Farm and Dairy.

The annual reports of the Secretary of Agriculture for Nova Scotia, Prof. M. Cumming, differ from similar reports published elsewhere in that the report each year deals with some one phase of agriculture, and is designed to be a valuable hand book for the Nova Scotia farmers who make use of it. The report this year deals exhaustively with all phases of fruit growing. In it are contained articles on the care of the apple orchard the packing and marketing of fruits, the combating of insect pests, and the culture of small fruits. Articles from the most [illegible] fruit growers in Nova Scotia are included in the report, which is a valuable guide for fruit growers and should be secured by all Nova Scotia farmers who are at all interested in fruit.

Dairying in Nova Scotia in 1910 has made great progress. The make at cheese factories and creameries in the province shows an increase over 1909 of 18 per cent. in cheese and 50 per cent. in butter. The Government creamery at Scotsburn has increased its output 214 per cent. Professor Cumming believes that Maritime agriculture is just on the verge of a great development. On every hand are seen evidences of an awakened interest among the farmers of the province.

BUTTERMILK

From Farm and Dairy.

Butter milk carried over from one churning to another is the most common starter used in home dairy work, and it accounts for a great deal of the bad flavors that are too often characteristic of home dairy butter. Bad flavors in butter are usually due to the action of bacteria, which float in the air. These get into the butter milk, and unless the starter is changed the flavors, which they produce, will soon be characteristic of the butter produced on that farm.

The whole milk starter is widely used by home butter makers who have a reputation for producing first-class dairy butter. To prepare a whole milk starter, a milk pail is sterilized with scalding water and milked half full from a cow whose sides and udder have been wiped with a damp cloth. This pail is covered with a clean muslin cloth and allowed to stand in a warm place until it is thick and curdled.

To prepare the starter that is added to the cream, sweet skim milk is heated to a temperature of 180 degrees and held at that temperature for 15 or 20 minutes. It is then cooled to a temperature of 70 degrees, and to this the whole milk starter is added. In about 12 hours, if the skim milk has developed a pure acid flavor, it may be used. Add 10 per cent. of this starter to the cream at a temperature of 70 degrees. A part of the starter is held over to develop more starter for the next churning. There will be a tendency for the starter to develop bad flavors, and it should be changed from time to time as required.

THE CITIZEN'S SERVICE WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

Interesting Gathering Held in Central Park Yesterday Afternoon — Addresses by Rev. Canon Davidson and Judge Huycke

MASSED BANDS

The downpour of rain yesterday did not augur well for the success of the citizens' open air meeting under the auspices of the Ministerial Association in Central Park yesterday afternoon, but the conditions changed in the afternoon and the meeting was held under ideal weather conditions with a warm April sun beaming down on the concourse, and a springlike breeze blowing across the park. The service was in every way most successful. When the time for opening the meeting was reached there gas a gathering of about one thousand people in the park and they remained through the hour's bright service. Nearly all the ministers of the city were present on the platform and took part in the services. Rev. R. Pogue, who was to have taken charge was unable to be present owing to an unexpected call out of the city and Rev. J. R. Webb, of Murray street Baptist church acted as chairman.

A very pleasing feature was the presence of the massed bands of the Hamilton and Peterborough Salvation Army who led the song service, and whose beautiful playing was thoroughly appreciated. The bands opened the service with a selection, after which there was a prayer by Rev. H. J. Geith, of Knox church. Revd I. Couch of the George street Methodist church read a passage from the Scriptures.

Brief but eloquent and forcible addresses pointing out the lessons to be derived from the story of the first Good Friday were given by Rev. Canon Davidson of St. John's church and His Honour Judge Huycke.

An interesting and profitable service entirely appropriate in spirit to Good Friday was brought to a close by devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Jas. Rollins of St. Andrew's church. The hymns sung by the gathering was of a nature peculiarly fitted to the occasion and included "Tell Me the Old, Old Story," "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross, "There is a Green Hill" and "Jesus, Keep Me Near the Cross."

At any rate the founder of Christianity believed it was or he would never have given the advice to his hearers on the mountain side, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." It would be a poor reader who would give his followers an impossible task. An unspotted heart is not impossible, but in a world of self-seeking that condition of purity is not easily attained. The strength of Christianity lies in the ideal set up. The duty of man is not mere worship, the slavish performance of religious ceremonies, or the giving of alms; it is to aim at perfection of life. The man of honest, clean, merciful character is the man who shall see God. Thus the humblest and the loftiest have a chance. Intellectual endowments, physical strength, money, count for little. They all may be used for very impure purposes. Indeed, these very things make it more difficult for a man to achieve an unspotted heart, to see God. As Christ said to the young man of great possessions who came to Him seeking eternal life: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of God."

Shakespeare has crystalised much philosophy into the line:

"A heart unspotted is not easily daunted."

These words were uttered by the Duke of Gloucester upon his arrest for high treason. He was surrounded by enemies who sought his life but he had no cowardly shrinking from death. In the interests of his sovereign and his country he had kept a heart unspotted, and did not fear to give an account of his stewardship to his God. Shakespeare felt the need of impressing the truth of the text, and later in the play makes King Henry VI. soliloquise thus:

"What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted?
Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just,
And he but naked though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted."

In one form or another the same lesson is taught in every one of Shakespeare's dramas. As a moral philosopher—and he is as much that as is Plato—he could not but make it a centre of all his teachings. "As You Like It" shows that sweet are the uses of adversity, selfish hearts cleansed by suffering become noble. "The Merchant of Venice" and "Measure for Measure" teach that mercy is the noblest attribute in man; "The Tempest," that the "rarer action is in virtue than in vengeance." The shrinking from death expressed by Richard III. shows how his spotted heart dreaded the consequences of his crimes. Richard cried out:

Let us look for a moment at heroes who have nobly lived and nobly died. Nelson, so far as national duty and his love of country were concerned, kept an unspotted heart. A more unselfish sailor never walked a quarter-deck. At Trafalgar to inspire courage in his captains and men he exposed himself to death. Abraham Lincoln was never a self-seeker. He pursued his course wth an unspotted heart. He had one ideal—his country's welfare. Threatened by assassination, he fearlessly performed his daily tasks with no guard about him, with no breastplate save a heart untainted. Henry Ward Beecher in his tribute to Lincoln's memory magnificently tells why he was so dauntless.

"Dead, dead, dead, he yet speaketh. Is Washington dead? Is Hampden dead? Is any man that was ever fit to live dead? Disenthralled of flesh, risen to the unobstructed sphere where passion never comes, he begins his illimitable work."

That is why the righteous man is fearless. He is already living in eternity and the eternal part of his being, dynamite, poison, or the assassin's dagger cannot kill.

It is needful to cultivate a pure heart, a generous heart. Burns was never wiser than when he said that the heart is the part that makes man truly blessed—or he might have added cursed. It is the heart element in religion that makes it attractive. Love is of the heart, not of the brain, and love is the sum and substance of Christianity. It is not easy to keep a heart unspotted, but it is the ideal, and if integrity and honesty are practised in the immediate calling of a man, these qualities cannot but leaven his entire existence; if as a citizen he has an unspotted heart, as a man he is on the high road to perfection.

SHE LEARNED FROM HER LITTLE GIRL

Dame Bouchard Found Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills

They cured her Daughter's Kidney Disease and she tried them herself, with the result that her backache and heart troubble are gone.

Jonquieres, Chicoutimi Co., Que., April 14.—(Special.)—Encouraged to use oDdd's Kideny Pills by the fact that they completely cured little girl of kidney disease, aDme flos. Bouchard of this village, is satisfied she has at last found permanent relief from the heart trouble and backache that have troubled her for so long.

"Yes," Dame Bouchard says, in an interview, "I am happy to tell you Dodd's Kideny Pills have made me well. They completely cured my little girl, twelve years old, of kidney disease, so I made up my mind to try them for backache and heart trouble. I have taken twelve boxes and feel sure that they will completely cure me."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing a great work in this neighbourood. They have yet to find a case of kidney disease they cannot cure. Whether the disease takes the form of Backachee, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Urinary Trouble or Bright's Disease, it is all thee same to Dodd's Kidney Pills. They always cure it.

SHOULD A GIRL TELL HER PAST?

There is an anxiom I have always been given to understand, among lawyers to the effect that "when you have no case, abuse the other side." This appears to be the position in which two of your correspondents find themselves. I decline to descend so low as to throw around common vulgar abuse or personal remarks in the columns of a newspaper. When "One who stands for the right," designates a man who differs with him in opinion—and whose opinion may be every whit as good—as "rotten", all I can say is I blush for his low vulgarity which I have no intention of emulating.

"Indignant Man," too, uses the same sort of weapon when he pens "lying insinuations." It is easy enough to call others liars in a newspaper column and behind the shield of a "nom de plume," but it almost invariably happens that some would not dare to do so face to face. "An Indignant Man" scarcely seems to know the strict meaning of the words he uses, or he would have chosen another phrase rather than "moral degenerates."

One thing in this person's letter I must refute. I absolutely deny that I made any insinuations against the purity of the other sex; for I honestly and firmly believe, and I would hate myself were it otherwise, that the great majority of women are pure and true and loving and loveable and all that is high and good, and I will be second to none in chivalrous reverence and admiration of them. There is nothing that does so much for a man as the friendship and companionship of a good woman. Neither did I say I had a sin in my life which I should "fear" for a sweetheart—good old word is that, although modern fashion has degreed it to be out of date—or wife to know. Yet, I would rather not have to own up to a pure girl, if one loved me, some of the follies of earlier life, when it was "youth at the prow and pleasure at the helm." Were a man to be in "fear" of his prospective wife, it would be better for him, I opine, not take one. But "love casteth out fear" we are told, and good it is that it should be so. One thing I can honestly thank my God for, I have never ruined a girl in my life, and never intend to. The crime of soul murder does not rest on my conscience.

Neither of these correspondents come to the point at issue. They have just side-tracked to enable them to pour out a measure of the venom of vulgar abuse evidently inherent in them. I wonder what sort of creatures such self advertising saints are in their own homes and in their business lives. Beyond these general remarks I will ignore the low, vulgar abuse of the correspondents mentioned.

I would rather, by long odds, prefer to be the Publican rather than the self complacent Pharisee. In one's walk through life it is noticeable that those who are so fond of insinuating that their fellow men are liars are usually perverters of the truth themselves and frequently on the wholesale scale. I can imagine two men pharisaically thanking—no congratulating—their maker that there are a couple of such perfect (?) men allowed to mingle with their sinful fellow creatures. What an honour to us! Oh! I have seen the type before; ready to throw the foulest mud by the handful at the poor unfortunate girl against whom there might be only the least breath of unfounded suspicion moving around. They prate with Pecksniffian humbug about their imaginary goodness, but let them take heed, for the man who is cock sure of being a saint upon earth is usually the first to succumb. Well is it that such men have not been provided by nature with a pane of window glass over their consciences. They would have to, on quick orders, get inside and pull down the blind.

Perhaps "An Anxious Mother" will say that I, a mere man, have rushed in where angels fear to tread. Well, so many of us men are nothing but blunderers after all; I guess I'm no better than the rest of them and not so good as some probably.

As I said in my last letter, I read the letter of "A Near Suffragette" with more or less feeling of disappointment. Yes, disappointment because some of her sentiments were so decidedly good that I felt sorry she should rush into print and spoil some good ideas by such a lot of "slang." I am not squirmish, but to my feeble mind, "Morally degenerate" mind shall I say? slang does not become a gentle woman.

"Mais revenons a nos moutons," as the French would say. Let me get back to the point; this has been a degression. "A Near Suffragette" observed that a confession after marriage might even lead to suicide. I know of a case in point. A highly educated gentlewoman had an "accident." Later on, she met a man who fell in love with her; and in love fell she. It was a case of mutual bona fide love, too; no half measures about it. She really wanted to tell him of "her past." He was so infatuated with her that he absolutely refused to listen even to a suggestion of it. He was so absolutely certain that his adored one had never committed any error. And good it is that a man should have faith in her whom he loves. Without that where should we be? Here is a case where a girl was willing to make her confession, but was not allowed. They were married and lived happily for some time. Eventually there arrives upon the scene the former lover (?) Oh save the word, who lets on to the husband because the wife has refused to again "listen to the voice of the charmer." And the consequence:: The husband, begging of his wife to deny it; her utter inability, in the face of proof, to do so; her reminder that she offered and was anxious before marriage to tell him everything and that he merely laughed at the suggestion. She told him how dearly she really loved him; how she was and meant to be in every way his true, loyal, loving wife. She begged him to forgive her past and to again throw a kindly look on, or a tender word to her. That this woman was absolutely faithful to her husband I do not for a moment doubt. She was just the type of woman who, when love came to her, it came passionately. He was obdurate; he felt his honour touched—in other words his vanity. He adopted the "high fallutin'" style. Result—a breakdown of her nervous system; a little too much anesthetic (taken of course by accident") and a sleep from which she never awakened in this life." May the loving God rest her soul. Cause of all her trouble, he was not shot—more's the pity! For the world would have been well rid of such vermin. Yet it might have been an insult to a self respectable bullet to have been aimed at such a cur.

Now where I have spoken of 'love' I have desired to use the word in its highest and most ennobling sense. I do not mean by the word love, any passing fancy, infatuation, mere fascination or vulgar flirtation. Rather the love which a decent minded man has for the woman he desires to take for his gentle wife, his partner for life, and the mother of his children.

THE CRUCIFIXION BY ST. JOHN'S CHOR WAS BETTIR THAN EVER

Easter time is usually a very solemn occasion with English folk the world over, special services being arranged by all Episcopalian churches. This was exemplified by St. John's Church here, last night, when the choir (50 strong), under the baton of the organist and choir leader, Mr. R. J. Devey, gave a fine rendering of Stainer's grand cantata, "Crucifixion." A large congregation assembled, Rev. Canon Davidson conducting the devotional opening.

The first item of the work was a recitative, "And they came to a place' (tenor), followed by a solo chorus (bass and tenor), "The Agony". Both items were well rendered, feeling being shown by the soloists in the rendition. Next number was the processional to Calvary, "Fling Wide the Gates," by the choir, which went with a swing and precision which was very marked. A tenor solo, "How Sweet is the Grace," was nicely rendered, with chorus "Then on to the End." The bass recitative, "And when they were come," was a good number, followed by a hymn by the congregation, "Cross of Jesus." Then came a bass solo, "He Made Himself of no Reputation," this solo being given with effect. A tenor solo, "King Ever Glorious," was another goo deffort. The items following were all given in an able manner, both choir and soloists: Quartette, "And as Moseee Lifted up the Serpent"; quartette and chorus, "God so Loved the World"; Litany of the Passion, by the congregation; recitative, "Jesus said, Father Forgive Them"; duet, "So Thou Liftest"; "The Mystery of the Intercession," by the congregation; recitative, "And one of the Malefactors"; hymn by the congregation, "The Adoration of the Crucified"; solo and male chorus, "When Jesus Therepre"; solo and chorus, "Is it Nothing to You?" and recitative and chorus, "After This, Jesus Knowing." Then followed prayer by Canon Davidon, and the concluding item by the congregation, "All For Jesus."

The soloists were—soprano, Mrs. R. J. Devey and Mrs. W. Common; altos, Mrs. Sclard and Mrs. Hinchcliffe; tenors, Messrs. H. W. Morphett and George Chandler; and basses, Messrs. Hagues'yer, J. Halpany and A. Flowers.

This is the six consecutive rendering of this finework by the choir; and under the baton of Mr. Devey it is excelling past prformances each year.

A member of the congregation, who has heard each of the six performances, stated afterwds that last night's work was the best of them all.

In the vestry Canon Davidson spoke a few words of hearty appreciation to the choristers.

The wardens, Mr. A. Coulthard and Mr. W. Johnston, tked to the comfort of the congregation in the seating arrangements.

Mrs. Telford of Emiland came in to help in the chorus, and was given a hearty welcome by the choir.

A SPLENDID MUSICAL FESTIVAL IN ARMOURIES

Hamilton and Peterboro Salvation Army Bands United in Providing a Fine Programme Last Night

WAS GREATLY ENJOYED

Peterborough is being favoured in the presence here for a three days' visit of the well known Hamilton I Silver Band of the Hamilton Salvation Army, under the direction of Bandmaster Woodward. The band is a most creditable organization, strong alike in numbers, instrumentation and playing ability and their music has been greatly enjoyed by the citizens generally, who have already had several opportunities of hearing the visiting musicians, and who will be given several more chances before their departure.

Last evening there was a united musical festival by the Hamilton and Peterborough Bands in the armouries when a large audience was delighted with a magnificent programme of band selections and numbers by different soloists from the two organizations.

The programme was a treat in every way and Peterborough is doubly fortunate in having such a fine band of its own and the presence in the city of such a splendid organization as the Hamilton Band. The programme was as follows:

Opening Hymn—"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."
Prayer—
March — "The Victory,"—Massed Bands.
Cornet Duet—Deputy Bandmaster Squires and Bandsman Walno.
Selection—"Rock No. 2"—Peterborough Band.
Concertino Solo—"Rolled Away"—Band Sergt. Cruse, Hamilton.
Band Selection, "Swiss Melodies"—Hamilton I Band.
Trombone Solo — Bandsman W. Cook, Hamilton.
March, "Leeds"—Hamilton I Band
Concertina Solo—Band Sergt. Cruse, Hamilton.
Instrumental Sextette—Deputy Bandmaster Squires, Bandsmen Walno, Ward, Deakin, Walno and Marriott, Hamilton.
Selection—Hamilton I Band.
Selection, "Crown of Victory"—Peterborough Band.
Band's Song, "Abide With Me"—Hamilton I Band.
Selection, "Wearside" — Massed bands.

The bands were in charge of Bandmaster Woodward of Hamilton and Band Master Peryer, of Peterborough.

The Hamilton Band will remain in the city over to-morrow and will have charge of all the services in the Temple. To-night there will be a musical festival in the Temple and an admission fee of 10c. will be charged to help defray expenses of the Hamilton Band's trip. The two Bands will have a united Easter march to-morrow morning at 6.30 o'clock.

EAVE TROUGH FELL

Blown off Roof of King George Hotel and Caught on Wires

Quite a sensation was caused on Simcoe street to-day about 2 p.m., when a large section of the eavetrough was blown off the top of the King George hotel, and swung suspended from some wires a couple of feet from the eave. It was very dangerous for people travelling along the north side of the street, so the street commissioner notified Chief Howard, who immediately took action in his usual prompt manner. The ladder waggon was soon on the scene and the firemen got up on the roof and removed the danger. During the proceeding a crowd of two or three hundred people assembled on the scene.

Mothers say Baby's Own Tablets are the very best medicine they can give their little ones. It is the happy experience of one mother that helps others to keep their little ones well. Thousands of mothers have found the Tablets a never failing cure for the ailments that afflict their little ones. Mrs. E. Sandwell, Coldwater, Ont., says:—"I find Baby's Own Tablets the best medicine any mother can give her little ones. I tried "soothing" mixtures but they did not help my baby, but as soon as I began giving him the Tablets they made his teething easy and I would hardly know he was cutting a tooth. I would not be without the Tablets, and always recommend them to my friends." Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Cressman's

Aged Colporteur Need Not Support Wife

Mr. Geo. Buskin's Case

(Toronto Star)

George Buskin, the sailors' missionary, appeared before Judge Denison in the County Judge's Criminal Court this morning, charged with non-support of his wife, Ellen Buskin.

Mrs. Buskin said she had been married previously in England and went to Kansas with her husband and he afterwards left her and wrote saying he had obtained a divorce. Later she met Mr. Buskin at a missionary depot on King street and was employed by him as a housekeeper at $5 a week and her support. About two years ago she married the accused. There were many disagreements, and finally he left her, saying he believed her former husband was still alive. She afterwards heard that her husband was dead.

Buskin promised to support her if she could prove this, but had not done so.

In cross examination Mrs. Buskin denied that she had ever "banged the accused's head against the door," "blacked his eye," or chased him with a carving knife. She said she had never wanted to marry him but thought that "perhaps God had called her to do a little toward helping in the good work."

In answer to a question she said women had come to her and cried and told her bad things about him. She admitted that when Mr. Buskin came back and was living with his children on O'Hara avenue, she went up there and demanded money.

Asked if her marriage to Buskin had injured her in any way, she said: "Yes, I am a moral, physical and spiritual wreck to what I was before I knew him."

Mrs. Buskin said she was suffering from nervous breakdown and this was due to what had been said and done to her by the accused.

His Honour ruled that the case did not come under the statute as any ill effects experienced by Mrs. Buskin were not due to the fact that she had not been supported properly but on her own showing, to what had been said and done to her and therefore dismissed the case. Mr. Buskin was not, therefore, given any opportunity to refute his wife's statements.

"In leaving Canada, after this my second tour here, I do so with many feelings of appreciation, and foremost among these is the delight obtained from the use of the New Scale Williams Piano. As you know, this instrument was used at all of my concerts in both tours in Canada, and blended so perfectly, and was in every way so satisfactory with its full rich tone, that I cannot say enough in praise—only to call it perfect."

MARGARET ANGLIN, the distinguished Canadian Actress who comes to "The Grand" next Thursday, April 20th in the New and Original Comedy "Green Stockings" under the direction of Liebler & Co.

Seat Sale Opens Tuesday

A distinct and interesting novelty is promised in the appearance of the celebrated actress, Margaret Anglin, who with her company, under the direction of Messrs. Liebler & Co., comes to the Grand next Thursday evening, April 20th, for one performance.

In a new and original play entitled "Green Stockings," by A. E. W. Mason and George Fleming, Miss Anglin will make her first appearance, since she has been a star, in a comedy role. The immense fame that is now Miss Anglin's, has been won entirely by her rendition of purely emotional and tragic roles. When she made her famous starring tour in Australia a couple of years ago, Miss Anglin had the opportunity of combining, in her large repertoire, comedies, as well as tragedies, and her success in both inspired her with the ambition to undertake in America the lighter phases of her art at the earliest opportunity.

When last year she signed her present contract with Messrs. Liebler & Co., it was expressly stipulated that her first appearance under their direction should be in comedy. The selection of "Green Stockings" was the immediate result.

It is stated that the play in which A. E. W. Mason, the famous English novelist and George Fleming, an equally distinguished playwright have collaborated, will afford for Miss Anglin and her colleagues a rare opportunity for the exposition of what is known as high comedy. The story is said to be excellent and amusing. The scenes are laid in and around the country seat of an English gentleman of means and leisure, whose four daughters are left to console him in the widowhood. What might be termed, in the absence of a better word, the text of "Green Stockings" and from which its title was suggested, is the old English and Irish custom, still faithfully followed, of the unmarried girls of a family being compelled to appear at their sisters' weddings in green stockings—a silent, though eloquent, reminder to the young men of their acquaintance that their wearers still are eligible. The fun of the story is found in the desperate efforts that one of the girls, Celia, makes to rid herself of the necessity of donning the stockings and so save herself from the reproach of being the only unattached girl of the family. Among the members of the large company in support of Miss Anglin are H. Reeves-Smith, a young actor whose previous work and achievements justify Messrs. Liebler & Company in placing him in the responsible position of leading man. George Woodward, Maude Granger, Ruth Rose and Ruth Holt Boucicault.

It will indeed be a pleasure to welcome Margaret Anglin in another phase of the art with which her genius has won for her such a brilliant and enviable position on the American stage.

HON. MR. BECK TALKS ON POWER TO MEMBERS CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION

As was announced in Thursday's issue, Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario, was rather unexpectedly present at the meeting of the Citizens' committee at Dr. Morrison's on Wednesday night. The meeting was supposed to take up the discussion of the power question, but the discussion consisted chiefly of the brief address of Mr. Beck, which included the reading of the report of the Chief Engineer of the Hydro-Electric Commission upon the power possibilities within easy reach of, and assumed to be available by, Peterborough. The chair was occupied by Rev. Father McColl in the absence of the chairman, Judge Huycke in the early part of the evening.

Mr. Beck began his address by saying that he had come unexpectedly, having only known of his destination a short time before he left Toronto. His presence in his official capacity as chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission was, to a certain extent, unnecessary, as the electrical problem in Peterborough was a local one. The idea of the Hydro-Electric Commission, was to deal with groups of municipalities, with the object of bringing them within reach of electric power, which had not the advantages that Peterborough and the Trent district possessed. This district had excellent facilities for the development of electricity through the head created by the erection of dams by the Dominion Government in the course of canal construction.

Mr. Beck briefly sketched the history of the general features of the development of electric power and the economic considerations that led to the organization of a scheme, tangibly expressed by the existence and work of the Hydro-Electric Commission. Through its work and agency, London, 120 miles from Niagara Falls, now had light for 4 1-2c. kilowatts per hour. In Ottawa the figure for the same service was 15c. and street lighting $65.

In Hamilton, after the city had joined the union of municipalities co-operating with the Commission in the acquirement of power, tenders for street lighting had been put in, ranging from $80.00 to $55.00 per lamp, as compared with the schedule of the Commission at $42.50, the latter sum including maintenance and provision for depreciation, but the Council closed with the Cataract Power Company at $47.00. Hamilton later required power for operating its water works, and the Cataract Power Company offered to supply such power 10 p.c. lower than any price the Commission might offer. The matter was submitted to the people, who voted in favour of the Commissioner's rates, which were $17.92 per horse power.

In Ottawa through the Commission, the rates for street lighting and house lighting were cut in two, with an annual surplus after paying interest and sinking fund. In three years there had been aggregate surpluses of $76,000. The fact of these surpluses created a demand for reduction of rates, which it was required to submit to the Commission for aproval. The new rates were a reduction of 19 p.c. with a continued promise of a surplus. Mr. Beck said the policy of the Commission was to equalize the rate of cost for electricity as between the large and small consumer. Proceeding from generalities to particulars, Mr. Beck said that the Trent district had been a source of anxiety to the Hydro-Electric Commission, and that the press of the province, irrespective of politics, had been very fair to the Commission, and that attitude had been shared by municipal authorities. In this connection, he instanced Port Arthur, which ha dadopted the Commissioners' offer of power for $24.5 0and had turned down a proposal of a private Comapny that had offered a supply power 10 p.c. cheaper than the figures of the Commission. But the people, with an apparent desire to control their own business, decided in favour of the Commission. The first bill sent for power by the Commission was $17.00, instead of $24.50. The Commission, Mr. Beck said, had spent 3 1-2 millions in equipping its transmission lines and carrying out its policy in other ways. None but the best material and best work, in accordance with the modern developments of electrical skill, had been employed. Notwithstanding an unforseen expenditure in the form of providing precautions for safety of the transmission lines, spare transform stations and increased right of way, the Commission had completed the transmission system, $200,000 inside the estimate. This line was cheap in the matter of cost, but at the same time, the best that could be built. Mr. Beck said that he was not urging their system upon Peterborough, but the Government of the Province and the Commission were at the service of the City. The Commission had been handicapped in the east by the local prejudice against Toronto as an assumed beneficiary by the work of the Commission. The Commission developed no power, but was simply the agent for the distribution of power to the municipalities through the expenditure made by the Government, in the interests, and for the advantage, of the people. He spoke of the negotiations of the Commission with the power organizations in the Trent district, whose object was to acquire powers for developing electric energy and arrange for its distribution and sale. Mr. Beck said that foolish investments had been made in order to secure a monopoly. These rates of purchase would make it impossible for the Dominion Railway Board to regulate rates, on the basis of net cost, that would be in the interests of the people. These conditions made it difficult to get power in the central part of the Province upon the most favourable conditions.

Mr. Beck then read the report which had been prepared by the Engineer of the Hydro-Electric Commission, who was regarded as one of the most capable experts in his field on the continent of America. After reading the report and in comment on it, Mr. Beck said that Peterborough was more favourably situated for the acquirement of power on the principle of public ownership than any municipality he knew of in the Province. In answer to a question as to the cost of the acquirement of the Otonabee Power Company, affecting the city's limit of borrowing, Mr. Beck said that a loan necessary to make the purchase would not affect this capacity for the expenditure would be in the nature of an investment which would produce a revenue. At the close of the meeting a very cordial vote of thanks, moved by Mr. D. O'Connell and seconded by Rev. Canon Davidson was tendered to, and gratefully acknowledged by, Mr. Beck.

Note.—The Examiner in good faith announced the printing of the report which had been read by Mr. Beck on Saturday, but for sufficient reasons this was withdrawn and the decision not to print the report was arrived at. The announcement was made in ignorance of the fact, which was not a matter of general knowledge, namely, that early in the year Mayor Morrow, who with Alderman Bradburn, constitutes the standing committee to deal with the power question, had applied to the Hydro-Electric Commission for a report upon the power possibilities of the river in the vicinity of Peterborough. It is assumed that the report, prepared by the Engineer of the Commission, and read on Wednesday night by Mr. Beck, was the report applied for on behalf of the City of Peterborough. The report was therefore irregularly presented to a semi-private gathering, which though it was representative of our best citizenship had no official standing. It was evident that such a report should have been first formally presented to the City Council, and it would be for that body to decide when and how it was, to be made public. The Examiner therefore, decided that a report asked for by the City Council—not formallly presented to them, and obtained by the press without the knowledge or consent of the representative body to which it belonged—could not in fairness to the Council or in justice to the interests of the city, and should not, through its instrumentality, be made prematurely known. From the nature of the matters dealt with by the report, and the business considerations involved, it was felt that the premature publication of the report might prejudice the interests of the city in connection with it, and adversely complicate negotiations, that would arise in the event of the report being acted upon.

DELICATE CHILDREN

Made Strong and Healthy by Vinol.

"I wish I could induce every mother who has a delicate, sickly child, to try your delicious cod liver and iron tonic, Vinol.

"It restored our little daughter to health and strength after everything else had failed. It tastes so good she loved to take it—not a bit of cod liver oil taste.—Mrs. C. W. Stump, Canton, Ohio." (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

The reason Vinol is so successful in building up any delicate, ailing children is because it is a combination of the two most world-famed elements of cod liver oil, aided by the blood-making and strength-creating properties of tonic iron. It contains no oil, and children love to take it and it cannot harm the most delicate child.

If we can induce you to try a bottle of Vinol as a body-builder and strength creator for your child, and you do not find it is all we claim, we will return your money on demand. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

What Do You Think of This?

How often we hear men say, "Yes, I'd insure my life if I was only sure I could keep it up. I could pay it alright as long as I had my health, but if sickness or accident laid me low I would have to give it up and lose the protection just at the time I needed it most." Now, the issues a policy just to suit such a case. Under this policy, should the assured become totally and permanently disabled from any cause, the policy is kept in force during such disability, without any lien or charge against it. Or, in lieu of this, the Company will commence forthwith to pay to the assured one twentieth of the policy each year for twenty years. Should the assured die before the twenty annual payments have been paid, the remaining instalments will be paid to such beneficiary as the assured may designate.

SUN LIFE

Assurance Company of Canada

Is not this the Climax of Liberality? The Sun Life live up to its motto of "Prosperous and Progressive." Investigate this proposition before insuring.

JARDINE TO HANG

Convicted of Murder of Lizzie Anderson and Must Pay Penalty on the Scaffold June 16th

NO CHANCE OF PARDON

Goderich, April 15.—Edward Jardine was yesterday found guilty of the murder of Lizzie Anderson in a lonely spot near the fair grounds on Sept. 20 last, and was sentenced by Chief Justice Falconbridge to be hanged on the 16th of June.

The court was crowded when the trial was re-opened at 9.30 yesterday morning, and almost immediately L. E. Dancey, the prisoner's counsel, began his address to the jury. He declared that there was not a tittle of evidence on which to base a conviction, except the prisoner's confession to Dr. Smith. There was, he contended, no reason or motive for the commission of this act. Yet the indictment charges "malice aforethought." "If you find there is no malice, you will be quite justified in finding him guilty on account of the insanity, and to my mind that is the proper verdict in this case," he said.

"Physicians for the defence and also Dr. Garrow, a crown witness, gave the opinion that at the time of the crime the man, being a sexual pervert, would not have knowledge of the quality of his act.

"You have witnessed the conduct of the prisoner in the box, the most uninterested man in court, apparently.

EDWARD JARDINE.

Our hospitals and asylums are full of such as he. Can you decide for capital punishment in his case?"

Mr. Dancey spoke for 45 minutes, and was followed by Mr. Blackstock, who spoke for an hour. The case went to the jury at noon. When court reopened at 1.15, the jurymen were in their places.

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed on a verdict?" asked the clerk.

"We have."

"What is it?

"We find the prisoner guilty," said Foreman Andrew.

Jardine was then ordered to stand up.

When asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed, he replied: "No."

Chief Justice Falconbridge in sentencing the prisoner, declared that there was not the slightest hope that the sentence would be commuted.

"I would recommend you to spend the remaining days left you on earth in preparation of the judgment of the world to come."

Free Prescription for Any Disease

Dr. Kidd's name and fame are world wide. Wherever civilized man can be found there his wonderful skill and success are known. He has cured thousands of desperate chronic cases, many of which had been declared incurable by other doctors. Much of his remarkable success has been due to the wonderful remedies used. No time—no expense, no trouble has been spared in bringing together these healing, curative life-giving medicines. Asia, Africa, Australia, the islands of the sea, the uttermost parts of the earth have been searched for rare roots, herbs, fruits and precious minerals from which these remedies are made. These private prescriptions have been improved year after year as new drugs were discovered. They have been tried and proven in thousands of cases.

Dr. Kidd now has a private prescription for nearly every disease to which flesh is heir—prescriptions that are the result of years of study—years of experience—prescriptions that have cured where all else had failed—prescriptions that are making marvellous cures every day. THE MIDLAND BASEBALL LEAGUE STARTS AGAIN WITH BRIGHT PROSPECTS

Lindsay, Cobourg, Port Hope and Peterboro Will Battle for the Pennant----Strict Resident Rule Has Been Placed in the Constitution.

The fans in Peterborough will be glad to learn that the Midland Baseball League is a certainty for the coming summer, and that the Peterborough team will have a franchise therein. The League was re-organized for the season at an enthusiastic meeting in Port Hope yesterday, at which the Lindsay, Cobourg, Port Hope and Peterborough teams were represented and the prospects are bright for a very successful season.

The League has been re-established on a strictly amateur and home-brew basis, and a strict residence rule put in the constitution, which will be adhered to under all circumstances. All players must be bonafide residents of the towns in which they play before May 20th, or in the case of players coming in after that date they must be residents for thirty days before they will be permitted to play. This will prevent any attempts on the part of the clubs to import players and will ensure "a home-brew league, a consummation that the fans have been devoutly wishing for, for a long time.

The following officers were elected:

Hon.-President—Mr. Roy Jex, Cobourg.

President—Blake Crawford, Port Hope.

Vice-President—Dick Butler, Lindsay.

Sec.-Treasurer—J. J. Dorris, Peterborough.

Executive Committee—A representative from each team in the league.

A schedule was drawn up, but it is only temporary, and may be altered. However the League will open on May 24th, with Port Hope playing Cobourg in Cobourg, and Lindsay meeting Peterborough here.

The Peterborough team will be picked from the best material in the city and although the T. A. S. enthusiasts have been chiefly instrumental in securing the re-organization of the League, it is not their intention or wish to place a T. A. S team in the field, but rather to have Peterborough represented by a nine selected from the city at large. Every ball player in the city will have a chance on the line-up and as soon as practices commence a general invitation will be extended to all who desire to compete for places. Merit, and merit alone, will be the basis of selecting the players. There is a vast quantity of good material in Peterborough and a very strong team can be placed in the League.

The Midland Football League Holds Annual Meeting In Peterborough

The annual meeting of the Midland Football League was held yesterday, (Good Friday) afternoon, with Dr. J. C. Devitt of Bowmanville, in the chair. There was a large number of teams represented, and the prospects are bright for another very successful season. The following teams were in line: Bowmanville, Bethany, Havelock and the Canadian General Electric team, last year's champions, while other clubs have signified their intention of coming in. The following convenor of districts were selected.

Junior—Group 1, Dr. Devitt, Bowmanville; Group 2, W. Hitchins, Havelock.

It was decided that the winner of the City Church League should play in the semi-finals of the Midland League.

The following officers were elected:

Hon. President—Hon. J. R. Stratton, M. P.

Hon.-Vice Pres.—Dr. McPherson.

President—Dr. J. C. Devitt.

1st Vice Pres.—P. D. Fitzgerald.

2nd Vice Pres.—E. E. Brumwell.

Sec.-Treas.—W. A. Milburn.

Executive—T. P. Lancaster, Havelock, J. Redpath, Lakefield; C. Morton, Bethany.

Delegates to O.A.F.L.—E. E. Brumwell, G. W. James, W. A. Milburn.

The meeting will be held in Toronto, Monday, at the Walker House at 10.30 a.m.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the retiring secretary, Mr. E. C. Brumwell, for his two years' active service on behalf of the Midland League.

STEINFELDT PREFERS BUSINESS TO BERTH IN MINOR LEAGUES

Harry Steinfeldt, veteran third-baseman of the Chicago National League Club, is through with the national game, if his own statement is taken seriously.

Some three or four weeks ago, it was stated in these columns that Steiny was through as a major leaguer, but few believed it.

The vet., one of the cogs of the great Cub infield, was believed to be more valuable than a youngster, who might be faster on his feet, but who would lack the head of the oldtimer.

Steinfeldt felt himself slipping when he refused to accept a Chicago contract unless he was signed for three years. At that time Chance asked for waivers on the Cincinnatian and all major league clubs granted the request. Steinfeldt then signed a one-year contract, realizing he had better take what he could get. He reported late at training camp, and his work has not compared favourably with that of Zimmerman and Doyle, who have been tried out by Manager Chance.

Steinfeldt has been with the Cubs since 1906. He has been a part of the machine which won four National League and two world's pennants. He became a Cub in exchange for Jake Weimer.

When told by Chance that he had been sold to St. Paul, Steinfeldt packed his war bag and left the club at Danville, Ill. He started for Cincinnati, with the declaration that he would go into business with his father-in-law.

The release of Steinfeldt to St. Paul is the first step in the disintegration of the famous Cub machine which won flags for Cubby Charlie Murphy. The next to go will be John Kling, the great backstop, whose age and long service are expected to tell on him this season. Manager Chance, too, is slowing up and Cub fans will be surprised if he plays first base throughout this season. He certainly will not do so if he finds a capable substitute in his youngsters.

FOOTBALL

The following clubs are affiliated to the Peterborough Church Football League—St. John's, All Saint's, St. James', Murray Street Baptist, Park St. Baptist, Y.M.C.A., Knox Church, and Coldsprings.

At the last meeting of the Church League, held in the Y.M.C.A., it was decided to have an "At Home" at an early date, if possible in the S. O. E. hall. All lovers of Association football, members of the different churches, and those who wish to see good, healthy football in the city, are earnestly requested to attend. An enjoyable programme is being worked out and a pleasant evening is promised at an early date. As soon as the committee's plans are made they will be announced in the press. Look out for further particulars.

St. John's Football Club held a general meeting on Thursday night. The meeting was largely attended and important business was transacted. This Club has a good team, and lovers of the game should not fail to attend the matches of this team.

A gentleman in this City has kindly offered a Cup to be held for 12 months by the winning team of the League.

A committee meeting of the Peterborough Church League will be held at the Y. M. C. A. this evening at 8 o'clock.

A FACTORY BASEBALL LEAGUE PROPOSED FOR PETERBORO

There is a proposal on foot to organize a factory Baseball League in Peterborough. The Brinton Carpet Co. is already in the field with a team and it is thought that other factories throughout the city will fall in line in order to provide some wholesome enjoyment for the employees during the summer months. Mr. Thomas Darke of the Brinton Carpet Company will be glad to hear from other factory teams in the city with a view of getting the organization of the proposed league under way.

TORONTO W. E. TEAM BEAT LOCAL FIVE

The Toronto West End Y. M. C. A. Junior Champion Basketball team proved too much for the local Y. M. C. A. Intermediate team, in their game in the Y gym. here last night and the visitors galloped away with the game by a 37 to 21 score. The locals made them work for the victory, and it was a pretty game to watch, but the visitors deserved to win by the margin they scored. Their shooting was infinitely better than the marksmanship of the homesters. They quickly adjusted themselves to the strange floor and seemed able almost to locate the baskets with their eyes shut. As a result they took advantage of almost every opportunity to score allowed them, while the locals threw away chances by bad pegging. Both teams played good combination and the checking was close and hard. The visitors' shooting however, was too much for the Petes. Dug. Loomis refereed satisfactorily.

The teams were:

The tug-of-war contest between school teams for the city championship was an interesting event. Three teams were entered, representing the Central, South Central and Collegiate Institute. The Central team had little difficulty in winning the event, proving their superiority by winning from the Collegiate in two straight pulls and then beating South Central two straight. The conditions were that the teams were to consist of six men, the aggregate weight not to exceed 700 pounds, and it was discovered after the contest that the winners were eighteen pounds over weight on the total. The championship will therefore have to be decided by another contest in the gymnasium at some date to be decided upon.

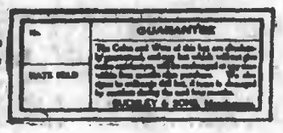
"Right here you will find the Buckley guarantee."

Buy a Buckley Hat to-day—and there's a strong probability that it will be in good condition four months hence. So strongly do the makers of the Buckley believe this, that they have issued a guarantee that practically means "hat insurance for four months" to every man who wears the Buckley.

The guarantee stipulates that if a Buckley hat should by any chance—even as a result of accident—show itself in bad condition inside four months, the wearer is entitled to a new one at the shop where he made the former purchase.



But read the guarantee.

Think what it means to be able to say to yourself, on buying a hat: "Now I am hatted for four months to come."

Think what it means, in honesty of manufacture, for the makers of this hat to issue such a sweeping guarantee.

On style as well as quality, the Buckley appeals to men of discrimination—although made in England, the blocks are all from American designs—thus furnishing the ideal combination of right style and right quality.

Union-made, and selling at $2.50, the Buckley represents just such exceptional hat value as you might expect from a manufacturer who guarantees his product with a broad, conditionless guarantee such as this.

With the facts before you, can you see any other hat but the Buckley?

Special to The Examiner

MEXICO CITY, APRIL 17.—With a proclamation in great newspaper advertisements the Diaz government is calling to arms all loyal Mexicans to the defence of their country against the revolt. Good pay and early promotion are mentioned as special inducements. It is stated that many Federal soldiers, fearful of the issue of the present campaign have deserted to the Insurrectos. Madero's son is making a big demonstration to-day in the vicinity of the U. S. border.

THE DOCTOR'S QUESTION

Much Sickness Due to Bowel Disorders

ARIZONA RESIDENTS WOUNDED BY STRAY BULLETS FROM BATTLE

Special to The Examiner:

DOUGLAS, ARIZONA, APRIL 17. —During a fierce fight between the Insurrectos and Federal Mexicans, near Agua Prieta, across the border from here. A hail of bullets and shells from pom pom guns fell within the limits of this city. The battle is still going on, and already several refugees and wounded have struggled in here. It is understood that the Federals were repulsed.

Later.—One citizen was seriously wounded and several narrowly escaped from stray bullets from the fight between the Federals and Insurrectos across the border. The U. S. troops all along the boundary have been ordered to be in readiness to move across any minute.

House Of Representatives To Report Favourably

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, APRIL 17. — The Canadian reciprocity agreement was in the limelight again in the House of representatives today when several Democrat members answered the arguments advanced by Asher Hinds, of Maine against the agreement. Representative McColl, of Massachusetts, a Republican, also delivered a speech in favour of the bill, and Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, the leader of the Opposition to measure presented his minority report from the Ways and Means committee. It has arguments very effective, but it is quite evident that the House of Representatives will send the bill to the Senate with a favourable report to-morrow night or on Wednesday morning.

Boy Makes A Second Attempt To Run Away Appears In Police Court

Thos. Drain, appeared before His Worship Magistrate Dumble in the police court this morning, charged with having stolen a sheep from Mr. Edward Fitzgerald. He pleaded guilty and was remanded for sentence until the 22nd.

A fourteen year old local boy was charged with running away from home. He went to Toronto some time ago, and worked there, until his guardians succeeded in locating him, when he was brought home. He has now been at home for about three weeks, and was caught at the station with his ticket bought for Toronto again. He was brought to the police court this morning, to see if something could not be done. His Worship imparted a great deal of valuable advice to the youth and told him to stay at home and then let him go.

William Jennings Bryan Is To Lecture Here

Arrangements have now been definitely made for a visit from the Democratic leader in the United States, Mr. Wm. Jennings Bryan. He will be in Peterborough on Thursday May 18, and will give a lecture under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. entitled 'The Prince of Peace.'

Many of the Washington correspondents are declaring, says the New York Globe, that in spite of his many reverses at the polls, Mr. Bryan was never more of a factor in affairs at Washington than at this minute. "The one supreme and inescapable political fact developed since the assembling of the new Congress is the widespread and decisive influence of this extraordinary man in the party which he led three times to national defeat." In another despatch, Mr. Creelman declares that "Mr. Bryan, in spirit, if not in letter, more nearly approaches the political ideal of the real Republican insurgents than does Theodore Roosevelt."

Mr. Bryan is the silver-tongued orator of the United States.

His lecture "The Prince of Peace" is one of the very best efforts and he will be heard with delight by a large number of our citizens on May 18th.

THE EASTER SERVICES AT ALL SAINTS' CHURCH

Easter day in All Saints' this year will long be remembered. It was the crowning day during the present rector's ministry and brought out the strength of the parish as never before. In the first place the newly surpliced choir of 40 voices gave a beauty, dignity and tone to the services never before reached, quite realizing the fondest dreams of those who appreciate the beauties of the Anglican mode of worship. The surplicing of the choir will not interfere with the congregational worship so characteristic of All Saints. Mr. G. J. Chandler is to be congratulated on the efficiency to which he has brought the choir. This was evidenced in all the music, but notably in the anthems, "They have taken away my Lord," in the morning, and "O death where is thy sting?" in the evening. The solo part in the former was most creditably taken by Miss. Mabel Williams, who showed great improvement as a soloist. Mrs. Johnston presided most creditably at the organ.

The congregations both morning and evening broke all Easter records, the number of communicants reaching nearly 350, an increase of over 100 in 3 years. The offerings were nearly $600, which is surprising as during the past 12 months two offerings totalling over $4,000 had already been taken up. The church was most beautifully decorated with abundance of flowers (generously donated) by the Chancel Guild. The Lay Reader, Mr. C. A. G. Spence, gave the rector most excellent and needed help at the morning and evening services.

MR. ELLIS' BRAVERY IN SAVING LIFE SHOULD BE DULY RECOGNIZED

Proprietor of Peterborough Mattress Company Plunged Into Otonabee and Saved Life of Young Boy After a Hard Struggle

A PLUCKY RESCUE

The bravery and presence of mind of Mr. Jas. Ellis, proprietor of the Peterborough Mattress Company, in plunging into the Otonabee River and rescuing young James Dixon, of Campbellford on Good Friday have aroused the admiration of all who have heard of the facts of the case, and a movement to have his action recognized by the Royal Humane Society would be hailed with favour.

It apears that young Dixon, who is only 10 years of age, and three other boys, were playing around the old Dixon Co's dam. The little fellow got too far out to the edge and the treacherous sawdust bank gave way, precipitating him into the water. The current is very strong at this point and carried him down under the Hunter street bridge about fifty feet from the east shore. A number of men watched him floating down but seemed paralyzed and unable to act. Mr. Jas. C. Ellis, of 444 Mark street, East City, and who has been sick recently, was lying on a sofa near the shore, just south of the Peterborough Mattress Works, as I noticed the boy coming down under the bridge, but at first he thought it to be only a piece of sawdust, until the foaming torrent whirled the boy's face into view.

Mr. Ellis had not much time to act, but immediately plunged into the seething current, and making his way out about 30 ft., succeeded in getting hold of the boy, and finally after a deadly struggle with the current, managed to make the shore. The boy was dragged out onto the east bank and Dr. Frederick was telephoned for. The boy showed no signs of life, and it was only after a solid hour's work that he was finally revived. Dixon, whose father, is connected with the Campbellford Bridge Works, has now thoroughly recovered, and is able to tell of the incident.

It is the duty of the citizens to turn their attention to Mr. Ellis, who so valiantly risked his life to save that of a boy. The action is not one to be passed over lightly, but one of the most praiseworthy rescues that have been performed in this city for some time.

No "lines," no cement—and perfect sight with the discomfort and unsightliness left out. They cost more than the ordinary 'cement bifocals' but if you are particular of comfort and appearance they are worth the difference. "Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled"

CHILDREN'S AID.

The girls and girl children of Peterborough have given a double significance to the term "children's aid" — children's aid to Children's Aid. Mrs. Thornley may have reason for her very low opinion of London school children, and she might find a few among Peterborough school children that are not quite angelic. But she would find a good many that are quite angelic, and these would consist of the T. O. O. club—Thinking Of Others. This band of school girls has shown the possession of qualities of thoughtfulness, of the angelic spirit of charity, and of business capacity and enterprise that place them on a high level of morality and practical religion. Of their own motion—off their own bat — they organized and conducted, on Saturday, a bazaar, in the vacant store, corner of George and Hunter streets, for the benefit of the funds of the Children's Aid Society, and as a result, this morning Mr. Peter Campbell, treasurer of the Society, received from the treasurer of the T. O. O. club a cheque for $75. All honour to those noble girls, who will make noble women, wives and mothers if they persevere as they have begun, and are not spoiled; if they will not have their hearts hardened by the veneer and varnish of society and frivolous worldliness. No nobler, no more practical and timely act of altruism—thinking of others, bettered by acting for others—has been performed in Peterborough for many a year.

TWO ANNEXATION PLOTS.

Certain Canadian jingoes, journalistic, civil, military, and otherwise, or unwise, are representing the United States' attitude towards Mexico as a companion plot to reciprocity—the one to gobble up the Mexican republic and the other to lay hands on Canada. The reciprocity "plot" carries its own refutation. As to the Mexican "plot" the sympathy of Great Britain with the action of the United States and its cooperation represented by the landing in Mexico of *British*British marines, the other day, disposes of the Mexican mare's nest. The manner in which this incident is regarded, is a proof of the progress of the international peace entente now under way between Britain and the United States. A few years ago it would have set the eagle screaming in the high C register, but to-day it is regarded and accepted as a friendly act of cooperation in the interests of peace and order. The action of the United States in policing the Mexican border in the interests of its citizens, is spoken of in warm terms of commendation by the British press, which regards it the duty of the United States to not only police the Mexican Republic, but all the rest of the suckling republics of South America. By the assertion of the "Monroe doctrine" Uncle Sam may have "bit off more than he can chaw," but Great Britain expects his government to keep these republics in order, or it will be compelled to step in, the Monroe doctrine to the contrary, notwithstanding. Uncle Sam has evidently no intention of annexing Mexico, but it cannot afford to have the Greasers raising trouble outside his back yard fence, and Great Britain only sees in the efforts of the United States to protect its subjects and promote peace, a natural and expected action.

OUR STREETS.

Our problem of dealing with our streets, like the poor, we shall always have with us. With the nominal advent of spring, the Board of Works has its work cut out for it. The disappearance of the snow reveals faults that should be remedied. Some of these can be remedied, but better than that, they can be avoided. Reference is made to the matter of trenches opened on the street for water, sewer, and other services. A drive or a stroll about the streets shows the sloppy character of the work done in the alleged filling of these trenches. Last autumn there was left over these trenches big mounds of earth, to obstruct traffic, and in the spring, to form dams, which held back water and created miniature lakes in some places. This spring these mounds have collapsed and, in many cases, left yawning holes, from a few inches to a foot or two in depth. This condition indicates that the work was badly and carelessly done, and the public have to pay the penalty, in the form of obstruction of traffic, as well as subsequent cost of repair work. This should not be. Persons who open the streets and destroy them, even for legitimate purposes, should be made to do the work properly. They should be made to leave the street in the condition they found it. It is safe to say that this is never done, though it involves little additional expense at the time, and the later levelling and filling calls for a good deal of expense in the aggregate, when the city has to do the work necessary to restore the street to safe and passable condition. In the city's own sewer work the filling of trenches is badly done. High mounds of earth are left in the middle of the street, to be an obstacle of traffic for months and finally the city has to spend considerable money to remedy a state that should never have existed. Trenches can be filled so as to be level with the street when the "job" is over. It is sheer waste of money to do work in this way. It would cost a trifle more to fill a trench properly, but this cost would be far less when machinery and men are on the spot, than the cost of assembling a new gang for the purpose of remedying unworkmanlike work, not counting the destruction of the traffic of the streets, the very purpose and the sole purpose for which streets are made and maintained. The work can be done properly at the time, and the street left level and smooth. Private citizens can have a trench cut through the finest lawn and have it so filled that, with the turf replaced, one cannot see, in a fortnight, that the lawn has been disturbed; and that, too, with no subsequent subsidence of the surface. Of course it costs the private citizen a little more at the time, but not half as much as it would cost, after suffering the eyesore of having his lawn disfigured for months, and as is the case sometimes, for years, with a ghastly heap, like an elongated grave-mound. Better filling of trenches is one of the ways in which the city can improve the matter of dealing with our streets. It seems to even an ordinary observer that the money of the taxpayers, devoted to street work could be spent to far better advantage.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

It was an important announcement that was made by the Hon. eGorge P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, in the Commons last week, when he informed the House that a contract had been let to the St. Lawrence Bridge Company for the construction of the superstructure of the Quebec bridge at $8,650,000.00. This, with the contract already let for the substructure, makes a total of about $12,000,000. This bridge, which will be one of the engineering wonders of the world, is on the line of the Transcontinental Railway, where it crosses the St. Lawrence River near Quebec, and will be the largest cantilever bridge in the world, the suspension span being the longest single truss span ever designed. The span exceeds that of the celebrated Forth bridge, Scotland, by 80 feet. In working out the design Mr. Graham has had in consultation a commission of the world's most expert bridge engineers, whose work has extended over a period of two and a half years. This will be the only bridge over the St. Lawrence River east of Montreal, and will be used by the Transcontinental Railway, and any other roads that may require it. It is expected that the bridge will be ready for traffic by 1915. The St. Lawrence Bridge Company, which succeeded in competition with German, English, and United States firms, is a purely Canadian company, comprising the Dominion Bridge Company, Montreal P.Q., and the Canadian Bridge Company, Walkerville, Ont. This bridge, when completed, may well be looked upon as one of Canada's greatest undertakings. The design which has been adopted will have K webb system in the cantilever and anchor arms. The suspended span is of a modified Pratt type. The length of the centre span is to be 1,800 feet. The total length of the structure is 3,228 feet, or about 3-5 of a mile. The suspended span is 640 feet long, 110 feet deep at the centre, and 70 feet at each end. The cantilever arms are 580 feet long, 70 feet deep at the end, and 310 feet high over the main post. The anchor arms are 520 feet long. The width of the bridge between the trusses is 88 feet. The bridge will be 150 feet above high water. The depth of the water in the middle of the river is 220 feet. All members in the anchor arms and those immediately over the main pier, as well as the floor arms, will be built of carbon steel. The cantilever arms and suspended span will be of nickel steel.

The piers are all to be built of cement concrete below water, and granite-faced masonry filled with cement concrete above the water. The abutments are to be of granite masonry. The caisson over the main pier on the south side, will be 180 feet by 55 feet. The north side will be built in two sections, each caisson being 65 feet long by 60 feet wide. The bridge will accommodate a double track railway, and will have a four-foot sidewalk on each side for foot passengers. There are over 100,000 cubic yards of masonry in the piers and abutments. The weight of steel in the superstructure is estimated at 100,000,000 pounds. The transportation of this immense quantity of steel will require the use of sixteen hundred and sixty-seven freight cars of 60,000 pounds capacity, or sixty-seven trains of twenty-five cars each.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The largest blast furnace in Canada was "blown in" last week at the plant of the Lake Superior Corporation, Sault Ste Marie. This is the third furnace of this corporation. This is one of the "Soo" industries that was saved from destruction by the timely guarantee by the Ross Government of a loan—money, which Sir James Whitney said would be utterly wasted—"it might as well be thrown into the lake." But the money has all been paid back, and as it gave life to one of the greatest industrial enterprises of the Dominion, it has proved to be one of the best investments ever made by the Province of Ontario.

CANADA'S RIGHT TO MOULD HER OWN NATIONAL DESTINIES

The Right Hon. Winston Churchill, Home Secretary, speaking before a crowded meeting of Londoners at the Queen's Hall recently, asked what could be more remarkable as a current vindication of British Free Trade policy than the fact that no friction or ill-feeling or collision of interest or straining of the Imperial bond had arisen between Great Britain and Canada regarding the commercial departure Canada was contemplating. It was solely a matter for the Dominion to decide.

"Did the tariff reformers now contend that the dominions would leave the shelter of the Empire unless we paid them to be loyal by taxing the food of our people?"

For six years it has been known that we were not prepared to enter into reciprocal arrangements with the dominions upon the basis of a tax on food or meat. Yet to-day the British Empire is more closely conscious of its unity and strength than at any period in its history.

The Morning Post, commenting on Winston Churchill's speech at Queen's Hall, claiming a free trade triumph, says: Mr. Churchill had the audacity to pretend that none of Joseph Chamberlain's predictions had been fulfilled. Mr. Chamberlain laid great stress on the fact that unless the mother responded to the overtures of the daughter nations these would enter into relations with foreign powers, restrict the markets for British goods, and make for the disintegration of the Empire. How well founded were these warnings is shown by the reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States, which, if ratified, was bound to injure British trade with the Dominion, and which was hailed by leading American politicians as the prelude to the political union of the two countries.

Preference and Reciprocity.

The Standard, discussing Lord Selborne's speech at West Ham on reciprocity between Canada and the United States, says: "We recognize unreservedly the right of Canadians to mould their own national destinies according to their own conceptions of the fundamental principle of the British Empire. Canadians are absolutely free to make the proposed agreement and no whit less free than if reciprocity preferential arrangements had already been in force between them and the United Kingdom. The idea that an Imperial commercial union would have tied the hands of Canada against the United States is baseless. If mutual preference had existed and Canadians wished to make a reciprocity convention with the United States they would have been at liberty to do so. Canada and the Mother Country would each have chosen deliberately to claim certain advantages and to enter into mutual obligations and it would be within the power of either to alter the contract whenever it pleased. The proposed agreement between Ottawa and Washington is on an entirely different footing. It is not a contract, but a treaty, and under any arrangement of this nature the freedom of Canadians to shape their own destiny will be curtailed. They cannot obtain a release if they find it convenient. The agreement involves complications that hardly seem to have been considered by His Majesty's Government, and raises the questions of the rights of other states under the most favoured nation clauses. It is well known that Americans have always declined to accept the British interpretation of these clauses. Fifty years hence the market of Canada will be one of the largest in the world and that of Australasia would be very valuable, too. The question was whether these great and growing Anglo-Saxon populations supplied our children or the children of other peoples. The policy of Imperial preference was the only one to supply a satisfactory answer.

The Daily News, discussing Mr. Churchill's speech on free trade, says: The reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States extends the area of free trade to Canada and the United States, and, by the confession of the protectionists themselves, renders impossible the scheme of preference designed to destroy the economic designed to de the colonies.

ANTI-RECIPROCITY ROADS ARE BAD.

(Toronto Star)

The opponents of reciprocity have had a hard road of travel for the last two months. We should say roads, for their sad experience has been to take road after road, only to find it ending in a fence or a steep embankment. They said that reciprocity would destroy our systems of transportation. C. P. R. stock at once rose. Sir William Van Horne spoke against the agreement, but Mr. Bosworth, vice-president ,said that Sir William Van Horne's opinions were not those of the company; that in the board of directors there were varying opinions; that whatever was done with the agreement, the company would continue to do business at the old stand. Mr. Fitzhugh, vice-president of the G. T. P., and Sir Donald Mann of the Canadian Northern, declared in favour of reciprocity.

It was said that the packers would be ruined by reciprocity. Out came the news that P. Burns and Company, a large packing concern in the West, would be benefitted by reciprocity. The Dominion Securities Company, in offering bonds to the amount of a million dollars for the extension of the business, said:

"The business of P. Burns and Company, Limited, was established in 1890, and is strongly entrenched in Alberta and British Columbia. We are informed by them that the proposed reciprocal trade agreement with the United States will be beneficial to P. Burns and Company, Limited, on account of the location of their plants and the diversified character of their business."

It was said that reciprocity would mean annexation and the death of British connection. The London Times cruelly demolished this contention in a few sentences:

"We cannot tell how far the sporadically raised cry of annexation is influencing Canadian opinion, but there is no reason that the reciprocity agreement would produce any tendency in that direction. On the contrary, bargaining on equal terms with the United States might tend to foster rather than diminish the self-reliance and importance of the Canadian people."

It was said that the wise old men of Canada, Sir John Macdonald, Edward Blake, and Sir Oliver Mowat, were opposed to reciprocity. It turned out that every one of them strongly advocated reciprocity. An offer of reciprocity in natural products was annexed to the N. P. tariff. Sir John Macdonald dissolved Parliament in 1891 with the announcement that his Government was negotiating for reciprocity. The Canadian correspondent of the National Review who is a strong opponent of reciprocity, says: "From 1866 to 1890 many efforts were made to obtain a better footing in the American market, and Sir John Macdonald, whose Imperialism was always above and beyond reproach once went so far as to boast that every step in that direction had been the achievement of a Conservative Cabinet."

The Hon. Edward Blake, in his letter to the West Durham electors, said that the best policy for Canada was a moderate revenue tariff, with reciprocity. Sir Oliver Mowat framed a strong resolution for unrestricted reciprocity, and said that it was a fallacy to assert that unrestricted reciprocity would hurt British connection. "Our opponents," he said, "are afraid of being Yankeefied if they get unrestricted reciprocity. We are not afraid of being Yankeefied by any such thing. I am quite sure that the Reformers will not be Yankeefied by unrestricted reciprocity; and I hope Conservatives will not be Yankeefied by any such means."

The restrictionists argued at first that our farmers would sell so much to the United States that the country would be lured into annexation. This contention they are now destroying themselves, arguing that our farmers will sell little or nothing in the United States, but that we shall be flooded with American farm produces. Refutation comes from the United States, where the farmer, is told that we will be swept away by a rush of farm products from the north; that there will be almost a crisis, so far as farm mortgages are concerned; that the Kansas farmer will be at an enormous disadvantage as compared with the farmer of Saskatchewan and Alberta. In a cartoon in the American Economist, the farmer is pictured as a fox, looking at a trap marked "Canadian Reciprocity," and saying, "Not for me." An anti-reciprocity convention was held in North Dakota, and it was declared that reciprocity would cause the removal of thousands of people and millions of dollars of wealth to Canada; that American farm values would be reduced and Canada greatly benefitted at the expense of the United States. The opponents of reciprocity are finding that their latest road, like the others, ends nowhere.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

HOW can she be so interested in men's overshoes as all that? Perhaps she is married and is selecting a pair for her husband. But she doesn't look old enough to be married. Perhaps it's for her brother or father. How sweet of her!"

So you meditate.

And then the sweet young person whom you have been watching as she gazed intently into a shop window, full of men's overshoes and rubbers, suddenly reaches up to her hat, twitches it abruptly into a more satisfactory angle, and captures and plasters with a hairpin a lock of her hair that has strayed from the place appointed for it.

Whereupon, if you are the least wee bit of a Sherlock Holmes, your wonder is solved.

The lady hasn't seen the rubbers or overshoes any more than if they had not been there at all. Her attention has been on far more important things. In plain words, she has been gazing intently into the mirror wherewith the shopkeeper adorns the back of his show window.

You see, she is one of that regrettably common type of women who are forever examining their features and admiring their beauties in mirrors in public places.

In the restaurant with its mirrored walls this type of woman continually casts covert glances at herself. She sees someone looking at her and pretends to be absorbed in the menu, but a minute or two later when she thinks she is unobserved she is at it again.

In the elevator at R's store she is in a transport of happiness, for does it not have mirrors on all four walls, which not only enable her to see her face, but give her a delightful view of her back hair, a chance to see how her suits fits in the back and get a full idea of just how she looks from the rear?

In the street car in the evening you often see her gazing abstractedly out of the window opposite her. You cannot distinguish anything without because of the darkness, and you wonder how she can. She can't. But there's a reason. The darkness is obligingly making the square of the window into a most desirable mirror, and she is watching that most interesting of landscapes—to her—her own face.

If I were a man and saw a girl I was inclined to fancy doing this sort of thing I think it would sicken me more quickly than almost anything else.

If a woman thinks that her hair and hat need rearranging she should go into the rest room of the nearest hotel or shop and attend to them.

If that is impossible and some rearrangement is absolutely necessary, she should simply and frankly stop in front of a public mirror, arrange these things as quickly as possible, and then pass on without any prolonged study of her charms.

Under any other circumstances she should no more look at herself in a mirror in a public place than she would perform any other act that properly belongs to the privacy of her chamber and toilet table.

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

Velasco gazed steadily for a moment; then he dropped his head again and swaying slightly played on.

The bow seemed fairly to rend the strings. He toyed with the difficulties; his scales, his arpeggios were as a flash, a ripple of notes tumbling over one another, each one a pearl. His lion's mane caressed the violin; his cheek pressed it like a living thing, closely, pasionately, and it answered like a creature possessed.

As the strings vibrated to the last dying note the beauty of it, the virtuosity, the abandon, drove the House mad with enthusiasm. They rose to him; they shouted his name eagerly, impetuously.

"Velasco! Viva!—Velasco! Bravo—bravissimo!"

Over the packed Theatre the handkerchiefs waved like a myriad of white banners. The bravos redoubled. The women tore the flowers from their girdles to fling on the stage; they lay piled on the white boards about him, broken and sweet, their perfume filling the air.

The young Violinist bowed, his hand on his heart, smiled and bowed again. He went out by the little door and then came back and bowed and bowed.

The House rose as one man.

"Velasco! Velas—co!" It was deafening.

Suddenly out of the uproar, out of the crowd and the din, from someone, from somewhere, a bunch of violets fell at his feet. He raised them to his lips with a smile. "Viva—Velas—co—o!" The clapping redoubled.

About the stems of the violets, twined and intertwined again, was a twist of paper. His eyes fell for an instant on the blotted words and then the stage door closed behind him. They were few and almost illegible.

"Will you help me—life or death—to-night? Kaya." The rest was a blot. He scanned them again more closely and shook the hair from his eyes.

"Velasco! Velasco—Viva!"

When the young Violinist came forward for the third time, his dark eyes flashed to the eyes of the girl like steel to a magnet. They seemed to plead, to wrestle with him.

"Will you help me—life or death—to-night. Kaya."

Did her lips move; was it a signal? Her hands seemed to beckon him. He bowed low to the loges, like one in a trance, once, twice, their eyes still together. And then, suddenly, he wrenched himself away remembering the House, the shouting cheering, waving House.

"Ah—h Velasco—o!"

Lifting his violin he began to play again slowly, dreamily, hardly knowing home or why, a weird, chanting Polish improvisation like a love song, a song without words. His eyes opened and closed again. Always the gaze, pleading, wrestling, that flower like face, those clasped hands beseeching.

Who was she—Kaya? His head ached and throbbed, he was serious now. With a last wave and [illegible] strings; it was as though the earth had opened and swallowed him up; he was gone.

CHAPTER II.

In one of the poorer quarters of St. Petersburg there is a street on a back canal, and over the street an arch. To the right of the arch is a flight of steps, ancient and worm-eaten, difficult of climbing by day by reason of a hole here, a worn place there, and the perilous tilting of the boards, at night well nigh impassable without a lantern. The steps wind and end in a tenement, once a palace, spanning the water.

It was midnight.

A cloud has come over the moon, light and fleecy at first, but gradually growing blacker and spreading until finally it hung like a huge drop curtain screening the stars.

The street lay in darkness. From a window in the top of the arch a single light was visible, pale and flickering as the ray from a candle; otherwise the grey bulk of the building seemed lost in the shadows, lifeless and silent.

Suddenly the light went out.

"Hist—st! As if at a signal s'omething moved on the staircase, creeping forward, and then from the shadow of the tenement, from under the archway, emerged other shadows moving slowly like wraiths. Hesitating, stopping, losing themselves in the general blackness, and then stirring again; shadows within shadows creeping.

Presently a door at the top of the steps opened and shut. Every time it opened, a shadow passed through and another crept forward. No word was spoken, no sound; not a step creaked, not a board stirred. It was a procession of ghosts.

Behind the door was a long stone passage, narrow and dark like a cave. The shadows felt the walls with their hands softly, gropingly, but the hands were silent like the feet. Except for a hurried breathing in the darkness the passage seemed empty.

Beyond were more steps leading down another passage, and then a second door locked and barred. Before this door the shadows halted, huddled together. "Hist—st!" Instantly the floor under them began to quiver and drop, inch by inch, foot by foot, down a well of continued blackness. The minutes passed. They still dropped lower and lower, so low that they were now below the level of the canal down, down into the very foundations of the tenement, once a palace. All of a sudden the darkness ceased.

The room into which the elevator entered was large, low-rafftered and lighted by a group of candles at the far end. In the centre was a table, and about the table [illegible] chairs also black. The one [illegible] head was occupied by a figure [illegible] in a cloak and hood, with a black mask drawn down to the lips. The other chairs were empty.

By the light [illegible]

from the other, and twelve black-cloaked and hooded figures stole forward, also masked to the lips. They passed one by one before the seated mask, touching his hand lightly, fleetingly, as one dipping the fingers into holy water, and then around the table to their seats, each in turn, until all were placed.

Some of the figures were tall, broad-shouldered and heavy, others small and slight. From the height, the strength or delicacy of the chin, the shape and size of the hand, was it alone possible to distinguish the sex; the rest was shrouded in a mystery absolute and unfathomable.

As the last and thirteenth chair was filled, the mask at the head leaned forward and pointed silently to a dark object at the far end of the room, about which the candles flickered and sparkled. It was a huge Black Cross, suspended as above the altar. Below it lay an open bier, roughly hewn out of the stone, and across it a name in scarlet lettering. The bier was empty.

The twelve other masks turned towards the Cross, reading the name, and they made a sign with the hands in unison, a rapid crisscross motion over the breast, the forehead, the eyes ending in a low murmur of a word, unintelligible, like a pledge. Then the first mask to the left rose and bowed to the Head.

"Speak," he said, "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Of what is this man accused?"

There was a moment of silence, intense and charged with significance; then the mask spoke.

"In the province of Pskof there is a Commune. One night, last winter, the peasants rose without warning. They shot, they maimed, they hacked, they burned every Jew in the village, men, women and children; not one escaped. The police were behind them. The instigator of the police was—"

The first mask took his seat and the second rose, a gaunt figure, the shoulders bowed and crippled under the cloak. His voice was deep and full, with tones plaintive and penetrating.

"A month ago there were seven men arrested. They were taken to 'Peter and Paul' and thrust into dungeons unspeakable. They received no trial; they were convicted of no crime they never saw their families again. Three of these men are now in the mines. Two are still in the cells. Two are dead."

"Why were they arrested and by whose order?"

"They were workmen who had attended a meeting of the Social Democrats and [illegible] Liberal party [illegible] order of—"

THE HYDRO ELECTRIC COMMISSION'S REPORT

On the Power Possibilities of Peterborough Prepared by Chief Engineer P. W. Sothman at the Request and Instance of the Power Committee of the City Council

The subjoined report of the Chief Engineer of the Hydro-Electric Commission, assumed to be the report that the City Council requested the Commission to prepare was withheld from publication by the Examiner on Saturday, out of respect to the City Council and in the interests of the protection of the welfare of the city, which might be imperilled by the premature publication of what is to be considered a confidential document, till released by the City Council. But as the City Council doesn't seem to be concerned with the publicity given the report by a morning contemporary, which proposes to republish it, in to answer to what influence is not known, the Examiner, feels relieved of the attitude it assumed. Whatever harm can be done by untimely publicity has been done and a matter of news, the report which has been in the Examiner's hands since Wednesday night, is given below:

RE-POWER FOR MUNICIPALITY.

Toronto, April 5th, 1911.

The natural source of power for the City of Peterborough is the Otonabee River, which flows within the Corporation limits. This river is part of the Trent system, being on the route of the Trent Valley Canal, and the storage system which is being established in the upper waters by the Department of Railways and Canals is having an appreciable effect upon the flow of the river, which is constantly increasing in value as a source of power.

Available Flow Power Capacity.

Unfortunately no interconnected series of gaugings and gauge height records is in existence, so that it is impossible to obtain reliable data as to flow characteristics, all available figures relating to minimum flow being largely a matter of individual estimate, based on isolated gaugings. As a result there is considerable divergency of opinion as to the present minimum flow and the practicable minimum flow with storage.

Estimates of the present minimum flow vary from 1100 to 1500 second-feet, and from 2000 to 2500 second-feet, with the figures for power for navigation based on the practice to install generating equipment to handle 1500 second-feet, and power house and head works of sufficient capacity to efficiently handle a future flow of 2000 second-feet.

The portion of the Otonabee River which flows through Peterborough is not on the main line of the canal, which leaves the river at Nassau Bridge, 4 miles above Peterborough, and enters it again just below Peterborough Lift Lock. On this section of the river the head due to the natural slope has been concentrated by means of dams owned and operated by private interests, the flow, however, being regulated by the Canal authorities. Between Nassau and Lakefield, the river has been canalized and all dam and lock construction is under the control of the Trent Valley Canal, as are also the resulting heads and water-levels.

All the water powers in this portion of the river are either in the city or within ten miles of it, the most remote location being at the Village of Lakefield. The following is a list of these powers, their power capacity being based on an available minimum flow of 1400 second-feet:

Auburn Dam	1900 h.p.
Peterboro Water Works	1500 h.p.
C. G. E. Co., Nassau	1900 h.p.
Dam Nos. 4 and 5, Otonabee Power Co.	3300 h.p.
Dam No. 3, Canada Cement Co.	1500 h.p.
Dam No. 2, Unallotted	1300 h.p.
Total	15,800 h.p.

Available Sites.

The first four locations in the above list are not in the market, but the city has an opportunity to acquire complete control of the power situation, as represented by Dams Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. These powers have a present aggregate capacity of 9000 h.p., and a probable future capacity of 11,000 h.p., and it would be commercially feasible to develop these powers in rotation in accordance with the market requirements of Peterborough and Lakefield.

Preliminary Development.

The capital outlay which would be necessary to acquire control of all the power embraced by this scheme precludes the possibility of considering the proposition as a whole at the present time, but there is no reason why the municipality should not give careful consideration to the preliminary steps necessary for the consummation of the general scheme. The first step [illegible] selection of initial [illegible] Power Company [illegible] Nos. 4 and 5, and [illegible] property at Dam No. [illegible] Dickson of Lakefield. As the proposition is run in the interests of [illegible] with the object of developing at [illegible] fairly as possible [illegible] the better claim for consideration from a commercial and engineering standpoint.

Flow.

The Otonabee site is situated five miles lower down on the river than the Dickson site, and has consequently a greater area of watershed behind it. This advantage is so small, however, that at present both sites can be considered on a par as regards available flow.

Head and Power Capacity.

The present normal head at the Dickson site is 16 feet, but during the winter season the level below the dam could be drawn down so as to give a head of 20 feet. At the Otonabee site a head of 26 feet is available all the year round. The matter of allowing a 20 foot head at the Dickson site is entirely at the option of the Canal authorities, so that on Dickson site has a power capacity of the basis of a dependable head, the Dickson site has a power capacity of 2000 h.p. under present conditions, and a probable future capacity of 3300 h.p., while the Otonabee site has a present capacity of 3300 h.p., and a probable future capacity of 4700 h.p. In this instance therefore the advantage lies decidedly with the Otonabee site.

Rights Under Lease.

The Dickson property is held under a lease which allows the use of all surplus water without other restriction than is laid down in the general conditions of the lease. This lease is renewable every 21 years in perpetuity in consideration of payment of $2.00 per year rental. The Lessees under this lease are not given the right to transmit electric power.

The Otonabee property is held under a lease which allows the use of all surplus water subject to the general conditions of the lease, with an additional restriction to the effect that should the Trent Canal be improved or enlarged, any increased volume or flow of water which might thereby become available should not be considered surplus waters within the provisions of the lease nor accrue to the benefit of the Lessees.

This lease is renewable for three periods only of 21 years each, the final date of expiry being at the end of the third term, and the rental is said to be $2100 per year. Under this lease the Lessees are given the right to transmit electric power.

As regards rental and the use of surplus water, the Dickson lease is undoubtedly the more advantageous. The Otonabee lease has an advantage in that it permits the transmission and sale of electric power, but in the event of the city of Peterborough taking over either of these propositions a satisfactory adjustment of the above mentioned restrictions could doubtless be arranged.

Conditions of Purchase.

The Dickson property has been offered to the city for $200,000. For this sum the city would obtain the unrestricted right to use all surplus water passing and to pass through the flood-gates of the Lakefield dam, and to install works to develop such power as this surplus water will generate under a 16 foot head.

The property of the Otonabee Power Company has been offered to the city for $225,000. For this sum the city would obtain the right to use all surplus water at dam No. 4, subject to the conditions and restrictions above mentioned, and the right to install works to develop such power as this surplus water would generate under a 26 foot head. In addition to this, the city would acquire the present 1500 h.p.

5, a 6600 volt transmission line to Peterborough, a substation at Peterborough, a distribution system covering practically the whole city, and a connected load of 1250 peak horse power.

The Dickson offer means simply the assigning of a lease. The Otonabee offer includes not only the assignment of a lease, but a complete generating, transmitting and distribution system handling a load of 1250 h.p. and capable of handling a load of 1500 h.p. with very little additional expense.

Development.

The development of the Dickson site involves the building of a generating station, a ten-mile transmission line, a substation and a complete distribution system throughout the City of Peterborough, including pole-lines, circuits, service transformers and meters. The development of the Otonabee site would involve only the building of a generating station and the erection of such extra copper as would be necessary to distribute a preliminary 2700 h.p. economically.

Apart from comparative capital costs, the mere fact that the streets of the city would be obliged to carry a new distribution system, assuming that this is physically impossible, would be sufficient to place the advantage with the Otonabee site. In addition to this, the fact that the transmission distance is only 5 miles as compared with ten miles from Lakefield is distinctly to the advantage of the Otonabee site as regards continuity of service.

Costs.

The attached estimate indicates that 2700 h.p. continuous 24 hr power can be delivered to the customer in Peterborough for an average price of about $16.00 per h.p. from the Otonabee site. An approximate estimate of costs with reference to the Dickson site indicates that 2700 h.p. could be delivered to the customer in Peterborough for practically the same price as 2700 h.p. from the Otonabee site. As the load approached its ultimate capacity, the advantage would therefore lie more and more with the Otonabee site, the more so as the 2700 h.p. delivered from Lakefield would require the maximum possible development at the Dickson site.

Market.

If the city took up the Dickson offer, it would involve the creation of an entirely new market, with the Otonabee Power Company as a competitor, and also the duplication of distribution lines throughout the city By buying out the Otonabee Power Company, its competitors would be eliminated, a ready-made market would be obtained, and the necessity of duplicating the distribution system would be avoided.

Of the points considered above, the most important are, (1) Rights under lease, (2) Available present flow, (3) Annual costs, (4) Power capacity (5) Market conditions.

In the matter of rights under lease the Dickson property at present has the advantage. In the matter of present flow, both propositions are on equal terms. On all the other counts the advantage lies with the Otonabee property.

In view of the above, the conclusions are: (1) If, as seems possible, a perpetual lease to the Otonabee site can be obtained, at the present or at a less rental, and if reasonable assurance can be given that no drastic action will be taken in restricting the use of additional surplus flow then the Otonabee proposition is unquestionably the best. (2) If the terms and conditions as set forth in the present lease were strictly enforced, the transmission distance, advantages of distribution, and market conditions would still throw the balance in favor of the Otonabee site.

Conditions of Otonabee Lease.

The development rights under which the plant of the Otonabee Power Company operates, are held by virtue of a lease taken out on August 1st, 1901, by Messrs. W. H. Meldrum W. A. Stratton, and R. R. Hall, and later assigned to the Otonabee Power Company. The outstanding features of this lease are as follows: (1) It imposes a fixed rental of $1264 per year for land and surplus water. (2) The life of the lease is for three terms only of 21 years each, the date of the expiry being August 1st, 1964, after which date the question of renewal rests solely upon the decision of the Governor-in-Council. (3) Clause 13 of the lease stipulates that should the Trent Canal during the term of the lease be improved or enlarged, any increased volume or flow of water thereby made available shall not be considered surplus water within the provisions of the lease, nor accrue to the benefit of the Lessees. (4) Clause 14 of the lease stipulates that upon the expiry of the second 21 year term of the lease, the rental of the final year may be fixed "at any greater or other rate than herewith reserved," said rental to be fixed by and at the option of the Governor-in-Council.

This lease covers only the present site of development at Dam No. 5, and a lease will, of course, have to be obtained covering the combined development of Dams Nos. 4 and 5. This new lease had not been issued when enquiries were made early in March, but it is reported to have been issued recently and to call for a yearly rental of $2100 for the combined development. For lack of more definite information, it is assumed that the important clauses in this new lease are similar to those in the old lease as above described. The new lease must also include the right to use some 4½ acres of Canal lands which the plant will occupy.

The amount of yearly rental and the limitation of the term to 64 years, does not seriously impair the value of the lease, but the restriction as to the use of surplus water should be looked into closely. If the phrase "improved or enlarged" can be interpreted as applying strictly to the waters forming the navigable channel of the canal, and the locks, dams and other constructed works in connection therewith, then this clause imposes no greater restriction upon the Lessee than Article No. 21 of the General Conditions which accompanies all leases issued by the Department of Railways and Canals. If, on the other hand, this phrase "improved or enlarged," is extended [illegible] works in the upper watershed, the restriction will have a serious effect both from an engineering and an economic standpoint, and a definite understanding should be arrived at before any attempt is made to carry the scheme into execution.

Scheme of Development.

The contemplated scheme of development at Dams Nos. 4 and 5 involves the combination of the two heads by taking the water above Dam No. 4 and discharging it below Dam No. 5. This diversion will entail the construction, of about 2800 feet of head-race, and all the private property required for the same has been purchased by the Otonabee Power Company. A plan showing the general lay-out of the plant has been prepared and improved by the Superintending Engineer of the Trent Canal, and indicating on this plan are the several blocks of Canal lands which would require to be deeded or leased to the Company for the construction of the power house and headwork. The Canal authorities are considering the possibility at some future time of using the head-race of the new plant for navigation purposes by substituting a new lock of 26 foot left for the two locks of 12 and 14 foot lift at present existing. In this event the head-race would require to have a much greater cross-section than if it were used for power purposes only, and two courses of action are open: namely, to construct at the outset a head-race of sufficient cross section to accommodate the navigation and power interests, the Department of Railways and Canals bearing a just proportion of the costs, or to allow the construction of a head-race for power purposes only, on the understanding that the Department of Railways and Canals may at some future time, at its own expense, and without interrupting the power service, widen the head-race sufficiently to adapt it for navigation purposes. This question should also be settled before any steps are taken to carry the scheme through.

Estimating Data.

In January, 1909 an estimate was prepared for the Otonabee Power Co. by a well known firm of consulting engineers, covering the cost of developing the site at Dams Nos. 4 and 5 for a future installed capacity of 4000 h.p. and a preliminary installation of 2700 h.p. A detailed survey was made of the site, complete plans were prepared, and manufacturers' quotations obtained for the different classes of equipment. This complete working estimate has been finally revised to meet the requirements of the Canal authorities, and the figures derived therefrom have been used in the general estimate thereto attached.

The existing transmission line consists of a line of wood poles with two 3-phase circuits of No. 1 copper. This copper has a carrying capacity of 2500 h.p. with 6 per cent loss, and the line is in good operating condition, so that at the present time no expenditure for transmission is necessary outside of the purchase price.

The Peterborough substation is a substantial brick building centrally situated. The station contains 2000 h.p. rated transformer capacity, stepping down from 6000 to 2300 volts, with the necessary switching equipment.

The distribution system covers the residential, business and industrial sections of the City very completely, but not enough copper is erected at present to handle more than 1500h.p. economically. Some of the larger blocks of power are also located at such a distance from the station that heavy expenditure in copper would be necessary for serving at 2200 volts it has therefore been considered advisable to serve such customers by means of a separate 6000 volt power circuit stepping down at the point of load to motor voltage. The pole lines at present erected are in good shape and the poles are long, so that no difficulty is anticipated in connection with the erection of the extra power circuit. In the general estimate attached, allowance is made for the erection of the necessary extra copper, cross arms, insulators, and transformers. An allowance is also made for the building of such new line as would be necessary to serve new customers not located within the limits of the present system.

The installation of this 6000 volt power circuit will not only mean a saving in copper, but it will obviate the necessity of immediately increasing the substation transformer capacity, as the 2000 h.p. capacity already installed will handle the lighting and small motor load for some time to come. The system extended as above described, will handle a load of 2500 h.p. with ease.

The attached estimate allows for the necessary 6000 volt selector switches and a complete equipment of switchboard instruments in the substation.

In the estimate of Annual Charges, the maintenance and depreciation are based upon the estimates first cost of such portions of the present plant and equipment of the Otonabee Power Company as will be utilized, and in addition the charges on all new plant. The operating costs of the new system should not be appreciably greater than those obtaining at present, but as information in this connection has not yet been obtained from the company, the figure given is merely estimated. All other items in the estimate are self explanatory.

Sale of Power.

The estimates show that 2500 h.p. could be sold for an average price of $17.55 per h.p. per year. This refers to continuous 24 hr. power and does not take into account the possibility of re-sale of 10 hr. power or the possibility of supplying a connected motor load of say 2000 h.p. with 1500 h.p. station capacity. Allowing for re-sale of power and overselling of capacity, it would be entirely safe to assume that the enlarged system could carry a load of 3000 h.p. to 3300 h.p. with 2500 h.p. capacity installed. The lesser figure of 3000 h.p. would therefore reduce the average price to $14.65 per h.p. per year for 10 hr. power.

All the lighting and power business is at present handled by the company on a flat rate, and all present users of power, who are under contract, should be held to the present rates during the term of their respective contracts, and all new power business should be taken at a revised rate to be based on load-factors and on the annual charges for which the city would be liable in the event of its carrying out the proposed scheme.

All the lighting business should be handled on a meter basis, but at the outset the flat rate light users should have the option of coming in under the meter rate or continuing on the flat rate basis until such time as the revenue from metered light is great enough to allow of a definite decision as to whether or not the lighting load shall be placed on a meter basis exclusively.

Scope of Reports and Conclusions.

It is to be noted that the scope of this report does not cover the discussion of present rates or of rates to be charged in the future, this being a question to be taken up later in detail. The function of this report is to indicate the most favorable location for development from an economic and engineering standpoint, and having established this, to show what capital investment will be necessary to develop and deliver power to the customers. Also to show what annual charges such delivery will entail, and to indicate an average price for which the output of the preliminary installation of 2700 h.p. must be sold to cover said annual charges.

The capital cost for full generating capacity will be about $193,000 and assuming $150,000 of the purchase price chargeable to the generating portion of the system, the total capital cost of power at the switchboard would be $343,000 or $86.00 per h.p. on the assumption that 4000 h.p. can be ultimately developed. On this basis, the price asked by the company is not unreasonable.

The capital cost and annual charges for 4000 h.p. capacity have been included in this estimate for two reasons, first, because the restrictions of the lease make it uncertain as to whether sufficient surplus water will be available, and secondly, because if it can be shown that the City can handle the preliminary development of 2700 h.p. profitably, the success of the scheme is assured and any increments of generated power would, when sold, tend always to reduce the average cost of production, the result being either an increase in the city's profits or a reduction in cost to the consumer.

An estimate for full capacity would also require an allowance for further extension of the distribution system, and this cannot be estimated upon at present with any degree of accuracy. If the city sold power at cost, the additional investment for extension would be covered by an additional loan. If the city sold power at a reasonable margin above cost, extensions could be made as required and the cost defrayed out of the revenue.

In the meantime, the estimates submitted indicate that the annual charges incident to the development and sale of 2700 h.p. can be covered by selling power at a very reasonable price. This being the case, the continued success of the scheme would seem to be inevitable, and all consideration as to the cost of power when the ultimate capacity of the site has been reached can safely be left over until market requirements make such consideration necessary. The present conclusion is that the Otonabee site at Dams Nos. 4 and 5 is best suited for the city's purposes, and that the city could well afford to pay $215,000 for the Otonabee Power Company's complete system and develop the sites at Dams Nos. 4 and 5, providing market of 2500 h.p. is in sight.

The beautiful spring weather has its drawbacks. The good housewife gets the feeling of discontent — gets tired of the dust and dirt resulting from a closed up house all winter—the cob webs seem to glare at her and arouse in her breast a feeling of antagonism toward them. She calls forth her forces and brings in reinforcements and begins. Wall papering then is the first step, the rest comes as a natural course of events, and finally the window drapes and shades are overhauled; the arch drapes and rugs are renovated and if necessary, replaced by new ones. This is where we come in.

No information is at hand concerning the business being done at present by the Otonabee Power Company but it is reported that their gross yearly earnings are in the neighborhood of $30,000, this being derived from a load of 1250 h.p. on the peak. If the city can hold this business while developing a market for the balance of the power, it will go a long way towards obviating the possibility of a deficit in the first year's operation.

Respectfully submitted,

Splendid Work Of St. John's Choir Is Strikingly Exemplified

St. John's choir completed a most strenuous week yesterday by overflowing the seating accommodation in the chancel at the Easter services. From the first week in September to Easter Sunday, faithful practice has brought the choir to a fine point in their service and anthem work, and the winter's training was in evidence at the final stages, when, in addition to Stainer's "Crucifixion" on Good Friday, the Easter services embraced no less than three numbers from Handel's "Messiah," Sir George Martin's dramatic Easter anthem, "As it Began to Dawn," and service form of the Holy Communion, Te Deum and Evening Service, the climax being reached when, notwithstanding the exacting exertions of Holy Week, the "Hallelujah" chorus from the Messiah was splendidly sung with an enthusiasm scarcely to be expected of any voluntary body of singers. Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie, an enthusiastic member of the choir, has invited the adult members of the choir to her home on Tuesday evening, when the next stage of the choir's work will be rehearsed, viz., Mendelssohn's "Come Let Us Sing." This will be in the nature of a Coronation choral celebration, and Mr. R. J. Devey is assured of many voices of other choirs who will unite in making the rendering of the above work a memorable event in sacred choral work in Peterborough. The highest praise is due to a body of purely voluntary choristers, who have devoted an immense amount of time to practice and rehearsal, and at this stage have reached a point in their standard works equal to any body of voluntary singers in the Anglican church from the Atlantic to the Pacific, without the least diminishing the devout rendering of the liturgical offices. May they long continue in their good work.

Clancy, N. Simonds, and J. Delaire; Messrs. H. Quinlan, G. Daly, F. Hickey and J. Minicolo. During the offertory in the morning the full chorus sang Lamberlott's "Regina Coeli. At the evening service there were no solos but the choir rendered appropri[ate] hymns as follows: O Salu[taris] Hostia, by Tantumergo.

Valedictory Service And Sermon Of Reverend Doctor Langfeldt

Bade Farewell to His Congregation Last Evening at the Close of a Ten Year Rectorship.

HIS FINAL REMARKS

Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, who has been rector of St. Luke's, East City, since September, 1901, conducted his last service and preached his last sermon as rector of the parish, on Easter Sunday night. Recently, as is generally known, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt resigned his rectorship to accept the incumbency of Innisfil, Simcoe County, tendered him by the Lord Bishop of the Diocese. There was a large congregation, many from the parish of St. John's and from other communions being in attendance. A bright, joyous and reverent service conducted by Dr. Langfeldt and characterized by hearty singing, led by an excellent and capable choir, was followed by a sermon in the Rector's best vein, in which there were judicious references, in good taste, to the coming severance of his relations, with the congregation to which he had ministered for ten years.

In the departure of Dr. Langfeldt the city is losing one of its best preachers, one of the most eloquent and, from the human point of regard, most effective, pulpit speaker in Central Ontario. While his sermons are marked by scriptural soundness, scholarly and evangelical appeal, and a devotional spirit, they are also marked by a literary quality, and employment of happily chosen, English, which would be a credit to a cultured speaker to whom it was a native language, but remarkable in a German, self-educated in English, to whom fifteen years ago it was an unknown tongue. Rev. Dr. Langfeldt was born in Gustrow, in the Duchy of Mecklenberg, Germany. He was educated in one of the excellent gymnasia of Germany and in due course entered the University of Rostock, where he studied medicine for a time, but abandoned it for arts, and advanced to the degree of M.A., and later gained the degree of Ph.D. In 1895 he paid a visit to Canada and coming under religious influences that led to his studying for holy orders, in 1896 he entered upon his studies at Wycliffe College, and with so little knowledge of English, that in the beginning he had to use an English-German dictionary to translate his English text books. He was ordained a deacon by the late Bishop Sweatman in 1899, a priest in 1900. His first parish was Omemee, where he remained till 1901 when he became rector of St. Luke's. While Dr. Langfeldt is a man of scholarly attainments, his highest quality is his generosity and large heartedness. He is not only large in sympathy with those in trouble, sorrow, need, sickness or any other adversity, but generous in his relief, and in departing from Peterborough, he will leave behind him many grateful hearts, big with memories of his practical kindness and unostentatious charity. The Examiner has always had pleasant and appreciated relations, and extends him its best wishes for a prosperous and happy, service in his new parish.

Rev. Dr. Langfeldt chose for the text of his sermon last night the 13th and 14th verses of the 3rd chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Philippians:

"Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended, but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things that are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

St. Paul is here admitting his beloved Philippians into the most intimate secrets of his own life. How often does this kind of frankness, where it is well-timed and real, carry with it an influence, become a pathos, of exhortation, far more powerful than the most direct or the most vigorous assault upon the conduct or conscience of the hearer.

This "one thing I do," has a persuasion, subtler perhaps, but far more impressive, than the commoner form of address, as from the vantage-ground of official authority. "This, and this, and this third thing, I charge you, do ye." "I have tried this, I have found this useful, helpful, effectual—I make this my rule, I deal thus with my difficulties, my faults, my sins,—in this way I wish to insinuate myself into your confidence, into your sympathy. • • •

"Knowing only too well my great shortcomings in this matter, it is refreshing to me to turn away from self to one who was not only real and sincere, but also deep in Christian knowledge and rich in spiritual experience; one who had no need to keep back anything, because however true, he had not himself 'proved' it; one who could say with perfect honesty, and challenge retort in saying it: "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ."

It is seldom that even St. Paul goes quite so systematically into the history of his spiritual life. He tells us in this chapter, whence he started in the race of responsible action, and how at a particular point he was led to change its very direction. I need not repeat the particulars. We all remember how, for several years of his life, St. Paul had been busy, had been in earnest, had been devout, in building his own little tower of the self-hope and the self righteousness, and how at a certain moment, in the very crisis of his persecuting, he had been arrested by the mighty arm of the Crucified, and Risen One, and had been made "willing in that day of Christ's power" to sacrifice his all for Him. He sees the figure of a trial, a sentence, and a confiscation. He had stood at the bar of judgment, silent and speechless, and heard himself con[demned] to the loss of his all. • • • [Now], he had consented to [this ruin]. His heart had gone along with it. He had not only submitted to the judgment, but he says, that he rehearses it with satisfaction, that he endorses every item of the sentence—"I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse, that I may gain Christ."

Thus St. Paul gives us a new estimate of the two words, "loss"—and "gain." He expressly contrasts them here. On the side of "loss" he places all those natural gifts, of descent and position, and unrealizing faith, which are so precious to flesh and blood, to sleeping consciences and dead souls. Even education, even attainment, even morality if it stops there, he seems to include among the "losses," when he is speaking of a world on which the light of eternity has been let in. When that is done, page after page of credit and investment and possession has to be torn out of the account book, and one single entry made in six letters, occupying not one page, and not one line of the ledger shall replace them all. That entry is the word "Christ." • •

St. Paul draws out the one word into a few particulars of its contents. "That I may be found in Him." He carries us to the inquisition of the great day; uses, it may be, the ancient types of the avenger of blood and the cities of refuge, and imagines himself the object of a hot pursuit, frustrated at once, frustrated forever, may he but pass within those protecting walls which offer safety to the sinner in a righteousness not his own. • • • But there is a present as well as a future, and the gospel has a life for it. There is a present knowledge not of a thing, but of a person, which it is "eternal life" to possess. "That I may know Him."

This "knowing" has two parts and two aspects. The one is the side of "power." The other is the side of "suffering." The Resurrection power of Christ is one aspect of the new life, his wonderful influence which is upon one—this feeling that, just when I am weak, just then I am strong — this experience of being enabled, time after time, when flesh and heart faileth, to perform that duty of service, of being influenced, I know not how, to attempt once more that discouraging work, of going forth where I am but half welcome, to kiss the hand that sinneth—I know not how you account for all this, but I call it the "Resurrection power." I explain it by the fact that Jesus lives, that He has all power in heaven and on earth, and that He is with us always.

I said there was another aspect. Yes, it is implied in what has been said of the former, "the fellowship of His sufferings"—"the gradual confirmation to His death." The Christian man has new names, new truths for everything. Others feel aches and pains, inconveniences and obstacles, deprivations and bereavements; they call them by these names, and they stop there. • • • But the wonderful thing is, that the Christian man sees in all these a much more serious, and at the same time a much more elevating character. He has all that others have of earth's trials—and he almost thinks he has more. Besides these, he has some trials which are his as a Christian—opposition, ridicule, spiritual conflict, spiritual disappointment—slow progress in grace, consciousness of indwelling sin, indisposition to what he knows to be duties. Yet St. Paul opens to him a truer view of everything which makes his life grievous. He is being made partaker of Christ's own sufferings. He is being wrought into the likeness of the suffering and tempted Saviour. He is being gradually conformed to His death. Who does not feel that such thoughts would give a new colour to suffering itself. Once see it in the light of discipline—the buffeting and bruising of the too buoyant life—the beating down of the self-confidence, the self complacency, and the self indulgence—the making earth's lights pale before the rising sun of heaven—the being made willing to count all things but loss, may we but win the one thing, not thing, but Person. • • • See it thus and you are reconciled to it,—you are in love with it, in a moment—maintain this view of it, and like St. Paul, you can "glory in tribulations also," knowing that in each one "the sufferings of Christ Himself are (as it were) abounding and rebounding."

"If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." This is the ultimate goal, as the present 'knowledge' is the nearer. It is with the nearer good that I would occupy your thoughts in a very brief concluding meditation.

St. Paul was always anxious that no one should estimate him too highly. He has scarcely written these grand thoughts about his sacrifices and his aspirations, than he recalls his readers to the present and to its duties. "Not," he says "that I at once (at my conversion) received the thing looked for, or am already (even now, all these years afterwards) perfected and consummated. I can but say this—I am pressing on if that I may grasp that thing with a view to which I was grasped by Christ." • • •

The direct purpose was a personal one. That Paul might be safe at last,—that Paul might accomplish his course with joy and at last win his rest and his crown. This is the loving Lord's object in laying hold upon him. He, Paul, "was apprehended," that he might "apprehend." But he has not yet apprehended. He has not yet grasped the thing for which he was grasped. Not yet. No—with a double emphasis—"I count not myself to have apprehended." I am still one with you, one with the weakest and backwardest of you, in every effort and in every anxiety of the running. • • • "One thing, one only." St. Paul continues. "I can say—I am pressing on. Part of the course is now behind me—the twenty years, or the thirty, through which I have lived a Christian; for all purposes of self-complacency or self-reliance I forget it. I cannot speed the precious moments, I can not waste the precarious energies, of the immediate necessities, in standing still to contemplate the traversed space, or to regret the omissions that are now irretrievable. Part of the race is future. Part of the course is in front of me. It must be all run over. • • • I strain every energy (such is the figure). I stretch every sinew and every muscle of my frame, to get over this space in front—this portion of the course which separates me from the goal. Thus with the "mark" for my guide,—making that object in the distance the director of each step of my way, that there be no zigzags in the running—I press on toward the prize of the high calling. • • • Brethren, the last thought which I would make prominent as my ministry here closes, is given to you and to me in the single idea: "This one thing I do—I press toward the mark." It ought to be descriptive of each life. We lost much, everyone of us, by having no goal. This makes the difference between a purpose-like end an aimless life in things spiritual. With many, the whole thing is a vacillation or an oscillation. Whence I come,—where I stand,—whither I go—I cannot tell you. I am not journeying—certainly I am not running—I am juststanding about in earth's market place, for the chance or no chance of a hiring. St. Paul's idea of having been called to, apprehended, laid hold of, from heaven—with a definite object, that I too may grasp, may seize, something which is full in view, of just in view, in the distance, and between which and me there is a certain interval of space and ground to be traversed, to be run over, before a certain clock strikes, and the terrible "Too Late" shall pronounce the opportunity lost forever.

It would be a blessed fruit of this last Sunday evening communing between you and me, if the Holy Spirit should be pleased by means of it to come point, which is almost to say earnestness, to you and to me. [We] might, anyone of us, be quicken[ed] to bring the question home—"Wh[at] is my sin? What am I living f[or]? What must I do? What must I [be] before death comes?" If it [be] breathes the unmistakable voice [of] no longer a drone, no lo[nger] slumbering man who is qui[te] terminus to make for a goal, [a] man who is deeply penitent [for] so many years had [been] at all! Oh, that each one [of] us, in the hands of God, [the] Holy Spirit, [would] make [this] Easter Sunday [the] work, in [which] as a citizen, [as] child, as a neighbour, [as] disciple—he would [be] self—men would not know him—[as] they would take knowledge of him [that] thus far, that, since he last [spoke] with them, he had been with Jesus.

May it be so with you and me; may it be so with this, my last sermon and worship here. May the Lord of all the churches bless the poor efforts and knit our hearts into one by a gracious outpouring upon us of the reconciling, harmonizing, the transforming, transfiguring ever—Blessed Spirit.

SHE WAS SURPRISED

When Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Cured her Chronic Liver Complaint

Mrs. R. Smith, of Winnipeg, Man., tells an interesting story of relief from almost intolerable sufferings:

"I can hardly tell you how great my sufferings have been. Chronic liver complaint accompanied by biliousness were a daily source of trial to me. Every day I experienced the sickening effects of these ailments. I longed for some medicine that should permanently drive them away.

Hearing of Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, I thought they were worthy of a trial. My surprise was indeed great. From the very first I experienced relief. Continuing with them I found my troubles were slowly but surely leaving me, and before long I cared more knew what it was to be free from the harassing effects of the ailments that had long sickened and weakened me. So great is my faith in Dr. Morse's Indian Pills that I shall never be without them."

The Distinguished Canadian Actress who with an All-Star Co. comes to "The Grand" Thursday, April 20

Margaret Anglin, whose appearance at the "Grand" in her new comedy "Green Stockings," is set for Thursday, April 20, unlike many actresses who adopt the methods of stars who has preceded her, sets herself no standards except her own. She holds that one can learn more of naturalness from the young than from any adult, no matter how talented. Naturalness is the note most intimately associated with this distinguished player.

"In acting, the novice can learn more from little children than from grown-up people," says Margaret Anglin. "Little children are absolutely natural and entirely graceful. Their emotions are true. As we grow, we become more and more repressed. It becomes necessary to conceal our emotions, but I do not believe in carrying repression to the degree to which [illegible]

"COURTSHIP" DISCUSSED BY REV. W. C. RIDDIFORD

Pastor of Park Street Baptist Church Continues His Interesting Series of Sermons Last Evening—Able Exposition of the Subject is Followed by a Large Congregation

At the Park Street Baptist Church last evening, the pastor, Rev. W. C. Riddiford, continued his special series of sermons upon the respective subjects of "Love," "Courtship," "Marriage," his topic last night being in the second in the list. There was a very large congregation and the interesting remarks were followed with the closest attention.

Preaching from the text "The song of Solomon is mine," "I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his banner over me was love," Mr. Riddiford said:

"Having really learned to love a person while wearing the best dress of the natural order of things, the next quest, and victory

In this way shall one embrace and adhere for a little while [illegible] Courtship is playing the game of love, in which both sides are out in fair undeceptive colors, the supreme joy in the realm of undying fair and devotion. Having sat for some time in the shadow of each other's love, and being confident that the banner under which this love war is waged is love, not lust, the contestants are on a fair way to consummate the utmost of all true love—get married and live happy ever after.

So is the way [illegible] this subject. Tonight I have given you two premises for a continuous line of two hearts that [illegible] each other with what Paul call[illegible] love."

There are courtships [illegible] that are everything else but.

Take the Harry [illegible] of courtship. What a degrading mess that was! [illegible] love, how much respect, [illegible] in such a courtship as that? [illegible] courtships is the unrestrained [illegible] of moral degeneracy, [illegible] animal propensities reign supreme.

Then there is the "white slave" courtship. What an awful type it is! Born in hell, surnursed in sin, damned for eternity, unless rescued by the almighty saving grace of God. No hell is too hot for these wholesale murderers of the purity, modesty and womanhood of our innocent daughters and sisters.

Then there is the forced courtship. Parents, of the Laban type, barter their daughters off for gold, or what they call "society standing." But in the name of God, mother or father do not barter your daughter's virtue, and sacrifice her innocence, in order to have a rich son-in-law.

The only courtship that is of any earth to human hearts is the courtship whose every moment is lived beneath the banner of love. "His banner over me is love." When you are convinced of that, then don't let any deteriorating motive turn you from your prince, be he rich or poor. It is no disgrace to be poor. Love will find a way, or make one for itself in life.

Victor Hugo has said somewhere, the supreme happiness of life is the conviction that we are loved; loved for ourselves—say, rather, in spite of ourselves. Love's banner floating over us forgives our many shortcomings.

When it shall please God to bring you to marry, my dear young friend, says Sir Philip Sydney, use great providence and circumspection in choosing a wife. For from thence will spring all thy future good or evil, and it is an action in life like unto a stratagem of war, wherein a man can err but once. How true that is.

Oliver Goldsmith informs us that he chose his wife as she did her wedding gown, for qualities that would wear well.

This subject of courtship is such a serious and vital subject, that I hesitate to commence a few thoughts upon it, as it is absolutely impossible to do it justice in a brief half hour.

I also feel I am not adequate to the task—but who is?

It is easy to make jokes and laugh at love, and at the lovers, but only a first class fool will do that.

Only a brainless brute, with a wishbone for a backbone, would dare to enter the sacred chambers of courtship where the destinies of two lives are being welded together for weal or for woe, with the laughter of foolish jesting. This courting is serious business, as it ought to be. The young man who insists on the exclusive company of a young lady for a year or two, and then in a heartless manner leaves her for another, without a just reason, should be hung.

Who is the greatest murderer, the villain who plunges his dagger to the hilt in another man's body,, or the brute who plunges a dagger into the pure, trusting, affectionate heart of a woman? Of the two, I prefer the former.

The great fact is certain that love is the supreme joy of any human life, and that if a man fails as a lover, he fails in the greatest opportunity and privilege of his earthly career.

Nothing can ever fully make up to him for that failure.

"I would like if I could to talk in such a way," says Dr. Banks, "that the discussion of this courtship question might be of some practical value, by way of suggestion or inspiration. That is my only reason, dear friends in taking up these studies. I feel certain that God has a message for some one here to-night. This week I have received several letters thanking me for God's message to you last Sunday evening. To God be all the glory, world without end. Amen.

Personally, I think many young men do not properly consider the fact that no man has a moral right to pursue any woman as a lover, except with the intention of marriage. I could shoot a man whom I knew for certain was toying with my sister or daughter, and doing it under the disguise of a lover.

Oh, young woman, know the man you let walk out with you. Don't throw your sweet, pure womanhood away. Smell his breath once in a while when he is not expecting it. If it smells of the barroom and rum, shun him as you would a rattlesnake, for "There is poison in the cup." Do not trust your future to a drunkard. Don't marry one with the hope of reforming him. Yes, I repeat, young men do not properly consider the fact that no man has a moral right to pursue any woman as a lover, except with the intent of marriage.

I am not speaking of that friendship which one may have for many women, a frank open spirit of comradeship. I am speaking of love. While all true love should be founded on or connected with a genuine friendship, it is in reality and intent something quite different.

Many a man plays with his power to love until the possibility of a noble supreme affection is lost.

The resources of his nature are fritted away in half-hearted flirtation until, in his worn and wasted mental and moral equipment, there is not power enough left to use to a high and holy passion—the passion of pure manly love, not the passion of lust, to gratify the animal propensities. You must rise and live above that if you would love a woman aright.

I beseech of you, in behalf of home, in behalf of a nation's future, young man, if you have not an exalted Christ-like regard and respect for women, leave them alone. Don't force your self-inflicted leprosy upon a pure woman. Don't infuse into other hearts the hell-fire that burns in thine own.

I can not too strongly urge the important truth that a man must have right and worthy thoughts of all women, and must hold himself as the sworn guardian and protector of all womanhood, in order to be the chivalric lover he ought to be towards any one woman. Young man, in Christ's name, I implore you, keep your heart clean. Keep your mind pure. Keep your body healthy and wholesome. Keep your record white, so that when love comes to you, as I hope it may in God's own time, you may look in the eyes of the pure woman who is the object of your affection, and tell her your love with an honest heart, without feeling that you must blush over soiled, hidden pages in your history.

Why should an honest man or an honest woman be ashamed to tell their past? I believe that a good many things are best said, when never said at all.

I agree with Dr. Banks when he says somewhere, "That many a man does not appreciate the fact that an insult to one woman is an insult to womanhood in general," or words to that effect.

Yes, is it not true, that a sin on the part of a man toward women is just as dark and loathsome as it is on the part of a guilty woman.

Woman's honour is the altar of home and humanity, and civilization itself, no man can lay profane hands on that altar, and not grievously suffer for it. God does not always pay at sunset or at the end of the week, but at last He pays.

You cannot exaggerate the power for good of a whole hearted, noble life of a good woman.

Henry Ward Beecher says that to most men love is a kind of well to which they resort when they are thirsty, and draw the crystal treasure for their present need, and then turn again to other satisfying experiences.

But there is a love that like a fountain, needs no cord, or pole or windlass with which to draw, but full, pulsing, night and day, in all seasons, sparkling abundant, pours forth its treasure, not by the measure of a bucket, or by the capacity of the need, but according to the fulness of its own life.

Such a love never dries up in the the summer heat of prosperity, or freezes in the cold winter of poverty, and misfortune.

A man who knows a love like that, and is loved like that in return, has come into an experience that lifts him up into the fellowship of men like Dante, Petrarch and Jacob, up into highest and noblest fellowship of the ages.

Let no man, as he values his happiness in time or eternity, make love to a woman, for any length of time, unless his heart's full tide is behind it: and his intentions for the future are honest, and having pledged your love and heart to a noble pure woman before God, keep your agreement. And young woman, before you give yourself up, body, heart and all to be the wife of a man, be sure it is love's banner that waves over you, then shall it be a delight to sit in its shadow.

Honesty is the best policy in courtship as well as the right thing. Courtship, as it is generally conducted, is a game at "blind man's buff," only as love of a certain kind is said to be blind, both parties are blinded, and consequently take a leap in the dark into the unknown mysteries of married life.

It is very necessary for both young men and women to be perfectly honest in their intercourse with each other, so as to exhibit always their true character and nature.

Young men and women are not true to themselves.

They put on false characters.

They assume airs not their own.

They shine in borrowed plumes.

While the girls often borrow their sister's best dresses to look pretty in. My wife always looked pretty to me in any old dress. She does yet and always will. Such false actions as that are not courtship, but flirtation.

The ostensible object of courtship is the choice of a companion for life. And who wants a doll, whose only worth to a man is to be dressed up in a harem skirt, or some other such device of the devil, and whose only virtue is silly pride. Courtship then is a voyage of discovery, or a court of inquiry, dissolved by mutual consent by the parties concerned, to see whatever and to what extent there is harmony of heart, motive and purpose existing, for the future struggle together in life's battle.

If in all the contracting parties honestly and inmostly agree, and find a deep and thrilling pleasure in their agreement, find their union of sentiment to give a charm to their social intercourse, if now they feel that their hearts are bound as well as their sentiments in a holy unity, and hat for each other they would live, labour and make every possible sacrifice with gladness, and that without each other they know not how to live, it is their privilege, yes, their duty, to take each other. For better or for worse, till death do them part.

Then and then alone, should a woman allow her prince to lead her to the hymeneal altar, and by heart law and civil law bind herself to him forever in the holy bonds of matrimony.

Yes, courtship's ideal is marriage—it can be nothing less.

Having passed the friendship stage of true love and reached the sublime height of courtship, a wedding is inevitable.

One of the meanest things a young man can do (or woman either, I have no respect for these jilting flirts) is to monopolize the time and attention of a young girl for a year or more perhaps without any definite object, and to the exclusion of other gentlemen, who supposing him to have matrimonial intentions, absent themselves from her society. This selfish dog-in-the-manger sort of action should be booted hard and plenty. He is a mean cur—nothing else.

Young men let me repeat it. Let all your dealings with young women be frank, honest and noble. One rule is always safe—"Treat every woman you meet as you would wish another man to treat your innocent, confiding sister. Such courtship alone will lead to an ideal marriage.

A proper marriage, a true interior, soul linked union is a living picture of blessedness, unrivalled in beauty. A true marriage is the soul's Eden.

It is the portal of heaven. It is the visiting place of angels. Such a union, a union whose banner over the contracting parties is love, is the highest school of virtue, the soul's convent, where the vestal fires of purity are kept continually burning.

Finally, young man, let me remind you that a woman's whole life is a history of her affections. The heart is her world. It is there her ambition strives for empire; it is there her ambition seeks for hidden treasure.

She sends forth her sympathies on adventure; she embarks her whole soul in the traffic of holy undivided affection and if shipwrecked her case is hopeless, for it is bankruptcy of the heart. Woman loves more than man because she sacrifices more. Woman's love is stronger than death; it rises superior to adversity, and towers in sublime beauty above the niggardly selfishness of the world. It ever remains the same to purify the cup of life.

It is the ministering spirit of home, hovering in soothing caresses over the cradle, and the deathbed of the household. Oh, remember young man "That the hand that rocks the cradle, not only rocks the world, but the one you choose to rock the cradle of the home you will I am sure some day establish should have your most highest and noblest affection. "Man's love is of man's life, a thing, a part, 'Tis woman's whole existence." Can I close this simple appeal, by quoting that beautiful poem of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, written for a young lady, who while visiting at Mrs. Lathrop's home, received a valentine written by a talented young gentleman friend who asked for her hand and heart. In part the poem read:

"Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the Hand above
A woman's heart, and a woman's life
And a woman's wonderful love.
Do you know you have asked for this priceless thing, As a child might ask for a toy,
Demanding it with a careless breath
And a careless, careless joy.
Then I pray you answer me, pitying
Nor deem it the act of a moment's mood;
For a woman's heart, when it loves indeed
Is unchanging as it is good.
I pray you answer me, tenderly
For life is a solemn thing,
And love is the greatest power we have
To lift us or crush us down.
You have written my name, it may be
In jest, maybe, you have spoken
Now stand at the door of my heart and wait
Its portal is open."

Why Shouldn't Your Boy Wear Clothes That Are Made For Him?

Nothing is more disappointing to the sight of the average mother than to observe youngsters dressed in a fashion which suggests the style of their elders. Children are children for such a little while that it is surely every mother's desire to have them dressed in clothes made especially for them.

And this, fortunately, she is enabled to do if she buys 'Sanford Juvenile Clothes."

In a special children's department, a corps of special designers, cutters and clothing craftsmen design and make clothes for youngsters. That is, they do nothing else but make juvenile clothes.

Patterns are cut, cloth selected and styles chosen with nothing else in view but the special requirements of children.

"Sanford Juvenile Clothes" are sold by the leading clothing & dry goods stores in Canada. Ask to see the new Spring and Summer models. You will find in them a complete range of styles and sizes.

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN

Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience—a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." HAD KIDNEY TROUBLE.

COULD NOT CROSS THE FLOOR PAIN WAS SO GREAT.

Miss Hazel Hess, Winchester Springs, Ont., writes:—"I was troubled with my kidneys for five years. They were so bad, at times, I could not cross the floor for the pain. The doctor could not do me any good and a friend advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought six boxes and now I have been cured for over four years. I will recommend them to every sufferer."

No woman can be strong and healthy unless the kidneys are well. When the kidneys are ill, the whole body is ill, for the poisons which the kidneys ought to filter out of the blood are left in the system. Then how important it must be to see to it that this system of scavenger be not clogged up.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a purely vegetable medicine, realizing quick, permanent relief, without any after ill effects. A medicine that will absolutely cure backache and all forms of kidney and bladder trouble.

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c. per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Be sure you demand Doan's.

The St. James' Soccer Team Beat Transformer Eleven

A very interesting game of football was played at Park Street grounds Saturday, when the Transformer eleven were defeated by three goals to nil. The Transformer boys won the toss and Captain Jameson decided to play with the wind and sun in his favour. The high wind didn't allow any scientific football to be played, an dinstead of helping the Transformers, spoiled several pretty bits of play. Mid-field play was the rule, and with the exception of a hot shot from Williams, Turner, the St. James goalkeeper, had very little to do. This was largely due to the splendid defence of Capt. Gribb and his colleague, Newton, who held the Transformers forwards very well.

At half-time no goals had been scored. In the second half Turner was transferred from goal to centre, and with the wind in his favour, scored the first goal from a pass from Bleakley. Newton scored the second goal, touching the ball past Stacey in grand style. Sparrow and Hotston were in the picture with a nice bit of passing and Turner got his head to a centre from the latter, scoring the third goal. The Transformers woke up a bit and Williams got in a fine run, but finised by shooting behind. St. James' tried hard to score again, but Cole played a fine game, feeding Stacey and Jameson well, who tried their level best to reduce their opponents' lead, and on several occasions were dangerous, but Jates kept dropping in, and saved the St. James' backs a deal of trouble, he and Hodson holding their men well. The Transformers are a good team, and will give several of the Church League teams a good run for their money. Following is St. James' line-up;

Her Face and Body Were Litterly Covered With "BOILS."

Burdock Blood Bitters Cured Them.

Mrs. John H. King, Johnston, N.B. writes:—"Last summer I was very much troubled with boils, and my face and body were literally covered with them. A friend advised me to take Burdock Blood Bitters. I got three bottles, and before I had taken all the first one my boils began to go away. I had just taken a few doses out of the last one when they all disappeared. My husband has also used Burdock Blood Bitters with much benefit."

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time, are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and to get rid of them it is necessary to put the blood in good condition, and for this purpose there is nothing to equal that old and tried remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters.

MATTHEWS IS FREED

Accused Man is Acquitted of Murder Charge—Jury Deliberated the Verdict For Four and One Half Hours

JUDGE'S SUMMARY

Cobourg, April 17.—At 11.15 Saturday night the jury in the Matthews' murder case, which had been out since 6.45 p.m. returned and announced their verdict. It was "not guilty."

The finding came as somewhat of a surprise to many here, especially after the charge delivered by Judge Clute, in which he dwelt on the points in the evidence which seemed to tell against the prisoner, and took particular care to instruct the jury that it was within their competence to bring in a verdict of manslaughter, if they thought the evidence did not warrant one of guilty of murder. The judge spoke for an hour and a half.

The prisoner preserved a quiet demeanor and appeared unmoved in countenance. Only the deeper lines about his face revealed the ordeal of suspense which he has undergone. He glanced at his counsel, the Crown Attorney, and the representatives of the press, and then looked straight at the foreman of the jury.

"Gentleman of the jury, have you agreed on a verdict?" asked the clerk of the court.

"We have," answered the foreman.

"And it is?" "Not guilty" was the answer.

The throngs in the rear of the court room behind the prisoner's dock and at the entrances broke into cheers that were echoed to the street, and told the waiting crowds outside of the happy outcome of the trial for the accused.

Thomas Rily, butcher, testified he was in the hotel between 6 and 7 delivering meat. He saw Matthews and Archie Brown and waited to see Tindale. Matthews was in the sitting-room when he went out. Hayner gave him his money.

It was expected that an attempt would be made to test the credibility of Henry Hicks, but Mr. Justice Clute overruled this move by the crown.

At 2.30 p.m. E. Gus Porter began his address to the jury. He spoke for one hour and forty minutes, making a strong plea for a verdict in favor of the prisoner Matthews, claiming that there was not evidence enough to convict.

Peter White, crown prosecutor, gave a masterly address, dealing with points and facts in the crown's evidence in a practical way.

Mr. Justice Clute in his charge to the jurymen, took about an hour and a half. His charge was slightly against the prisoner. The jury retired at 7 p.m.

Ex-Reeve Henry Hicks, who Friday night swore that he had seen and bowed to Miss Brimacombe in the hotel about 9.15 p.m.—the crown theory is that she met death an hour earlier—was the first witness Saturday morning. Crown Counsel White had difficulty in getting satisfactory replies.

Witness denied that he was known as Old Hicks, or that he was short-sighted. He wore glasses because he couldn't see without them, but carried his cane because of rheumatism. He had been at the inquest for 10 minutes, but said he had not heard Matthews was under suspicion, nor did he hear of his arrest until the next day. He had not been told any of the evidence.

"Not with me. I did not discuss it with any one. I went to hear the evidence, but I could not hear it, and I never discussed it with anyone," answered witness.

"Do you know John Reeves? Did you discuss the case with him?"

"I do not remember. I could not say it was not mentioned," he answered.

"Did you tell John Reeves that you knew nothing about this matter in a conversation at the club at Colborne?" Witness thought not.

At this point Justice Clute had his attention called to the presence of Reeves in the room, and all crown witnesses were excluded.

"Mr. Hicks," asked Mr. White, "did you tell Reeves that you had not been subpoenaed for this trial, but that you were paid $5 and were going to come?"

"And yet you told us you had not discussed the case," said counsel, to which he replied, "I don't know what you mean by discussed."

"Certainly not," said Hicks when Mr. White said that, according to his story, Miss Brimacombe was not dead at 8 p.m. He said she was folding linen or washing dishes when he saw her at 9.15.

SOMERVILLE MAN SUES THE G.T.R. FOR $10,000

(Lindsay Warder)

Yesterday Levi Hadley, of Somerville Township, started suit against the Grand Trunk Railway Company for $10,000 damages. Mr. Hadley claims that a couple of months ago he was working in the roundhouse in Midland when an engine was brought in that was in a poor state of repair. The fire was taken out of the fire-box to let the steam down when one of the workmen on the road threw a pail of water on the fire under the engine. The result was that a large quantity of gas was formed, which was permeated to the cab of the engine, burning him internally. The doctors say that it will be some years at least before Mr. Hadley will be able to get back to work. Mr. F. E. Waldon is acting for Hanley.

Cobwebs in the Morning.

Cobwebs in the head on rising in the morning is the result of a Lazy Liver, one or two mornings in succession and sick headache follows.

Father Morrisey's Liver Pills will clear the Brain.

These Pills are a purely vegetable compound prepared with great care, and are without doubt the very best pills for general use, on the market. The greatest care has been given to selecting the ingredients, and being entirely vegetable, they act upon the liver and bowels in such a manner as not to disturb the other functions of the body as many pills do.

As a Liver Invigorator, Blood Purifier and General System Renovator, they are unequalled. Sick headache is invariably brought on by a sluggish liver, constipation or irregular bowels; these pills are a cure for sick headache in any form.

Pimples, eruptions and yellow skin are often caused by a lazy liver; one pill three times a week, will soon clear the complexion.—Price 25c. per box.

United States Congressmen Are Widely Divergent on the Subject of Reciprocity—Paper Makes Inquiries

A POLL OF SENATE

Washington, April 18.—"After a thorough canvass of the Republican membership of the House I can state positively that a substantial majority of the party will vote against the Canadian reciprocity bill," said Representative Dwight of New York, the Republican whip, last night. The bill is to be put on its passage this week.

This will not prevent its passage, even though a number of the Democrats follow the course now indicated, and vote against the majority of their party. The Democratic majority in favor of it has greatly increased in the new Congress, however.

Five speakers participated in the debate yesterday. Representative Fordney of Michigan, a Republican member of the ways and means committee, and Representative Lenroot of Wisconsin, an Insurgent Republican, spoke at length against the bill. Representatives Harrison of New York and Peters of Massachusetts, Democratic members of the ways and means committee, and Representative Crampacker of Indiana, Republican, advocated its passage.

Mr. Lenroot gave an emphatic statement of Insurgent politics and views. Questioned from the Democratic side, he declared that he opposed the reciprocity agreement because he believed its actually increased many duties. He declared that if the Democrats were sincere in their desire to put more articles on the free list they would attach the free list to the reciprocity bill. He accused them of wanting the President to veto their free list bill when it finally passed, to make political capital for them.

"The progressive Republicans have never been free traders," said Mr. Lenroot. "I challenge anyone to point to any [illegible] progressive Republican in Congress or elsewhere advocating free trade. I stand for a protective tariff, measuring duties by the difference in cost of production at home and abroad."

"Do you endorse your party's action in passing the Payne tariff bill?" asked Mr. Cullop of Indiana.

"I do not," said Mr. Lenroot.

"Do you consider it a violation of your party's pledge?"

"I do," said Mr. Lenroot.

"If my party had kept its pledge, there would have been a minority upon your side of the House, instead of a majority," added Mr. Lenroot.

New York American's View.

New York, April 18.—The American's Washington correspondent writes:

Democratic tariff revision faces defeat in the Senate through alleged Democratic votes. A private poll of the Senate Democrats, which has been made by The New York American, shows at least half a dozen members who will refuse to follow the splendid leadership of the House and vote for the farmers' free list and other downward revision bills that will be passed by the lower chamber.

In a poll made by The American it was shown that if the Senate Democrats voted solidly for the House bills a sufficient number of Republican progressive votes could be secured to insure the passage of the tariff revision measures. It is practically certain now, however, that the Democrats will not vote solidly.

Bailey is already secretly at work against the farmers' free list. He and half a dozen of his followers are preparing to duplicate their tariff attitude of 1909, when they stood with Aldrich on many of the most vital questions.

Notably, it is understood Bailey will make a determined fight against free lumber. It is to be observed in this connection that it was Bailey who led the fight for the vindication of Lorimer, and it was Hines of the lumber trust, it is now disclosed, who played the chief part, not only in Mr. Lorimer's election, but later in directing the Bailey campaign for the whitewashing of the Illinois Senator.

One of the best-known leaders of the House informed The American correspondent last night that the House will have disposed of its entire legislative program by June 1.

This leader, discussing the probable action of the Senate, declared that among the well-informed members of the House it was generally agreed that the Senate will pass nothing—not even reciprocity, and that by about the end of August an effort will be made to take a recess until Oct. 1.

COLBORNE YOUNG MAN IS FOUND TIED HAND AND FOOT AND SECURELY GAGGED

Strange Man Tampered With Safe in Office, Tied Him and Set Fire to the Block, Leaving Him to Burn.

A STRANGE STORY

Cobourg, April 18.—A sensational story comes from Colborne to the effect that in a fire Sunday night Lester Burk, an employe of the Express Printing Office, was found in the burning building tied hand and foot and gagged.

According to his story, about midnight he saw a light in the Express office that attracted his attention. He entered and saw a man busy at the safe, who on his enquiring his business seized him, bound and gagged him, piled newspapers around him, set them on fire and left him to burn. Two citizens, hearing cries, rushed through the flames and rescued Burk, who was taken to the Brunswick Hotel, suffering from severe burns.

The conflagration spread, and the Youmans Block, containing the Express printing office, Toronto Bank premises, G. E. R. Wilson's insurance office, residence occupied by Mrs. Youmans and buildings next to it, in the west, including McCracken's hardware store and residence, and the Burleigh residence, were burned. The flames spread so rapidly that the inmates of the residences only saved the clothing that they wore.

Many wild rumors are afloat. It was said that the safe in the Wilson office was tampered with, but investigation, a later report says, proved this to be untrue. A tramp was arrested, but was later allowed to go.

When Burk was found his hands were tied behind his neck, his feet tied together, and he was fastened in a chair, around which the newspapers were piled.

Burk says he remembers the man saying to a companion with him: "If I don't find the papers, I will burn the whole place up." He describes his assailant as tall and dark and about 30 years old, with a moustache.

Desperate Around Fez.

Paris, April 18.—The decision of the Government to despatch French reinforcements to Morocco is due to the fact that the internal situation of Morocco is growing steadily worse. Several tribes hitherto faithful to Sultan Mulai Hafid have thrown in their lot with the rebels.

The position of Fez, including the matter of the lives and property of foreigners, is considered critical. The rebels are reported drawing a circle around the capital. Despatches received here by way of Spain indicates that sedition is rampant in Fez itself, with food growing scarce and communication with the coast becoming daily more difficult.

Condition of U. S. Steel Workers.

New York, April 18.—An investigation into the working conditions in the mills of the U. S. Steel Corporation was decided on at the annual meeting of the stockholders, in Hoboken, N.J., yesterday.

The proposal came up after the election of directors, when Charles M. Cabot of Boston introduced a resolution providing for a committee of five to investigate and report to the finance committee not later than Oct. 1, as to the truth of the statements contained in a recent magazine article alleging that employes of the corporation were overworked.

New Boat for Rideau.

Kingston, April 18.—The new steamer Buena Virta, being constructed by Davis Drydock Co., will be launched Wednesday afternoon. She is 98 feet depth and will be used on the Rideau between Kingston and Smith's Falls.

A FIERCE BATTLE IS FOUGHT ON THE BORDER

Mexicans Troops Are Repulsed by Rebels and Non-combatants are Killed—1,500 Federals Driven Off With Great :: of Life by 1,000 Insurrectos.

Agua Prieta, Mex., April 18.—(From The Associated Press in the Field.)—The most important battle of the Mexican revolution thus far was fought here yesterday, between 1,500 federals under command of Lt.-Col. Diaz, and 1,000 rebels under Balasario Garcia.

Estimated by the rebels, there are at least 200 killed and wounded.

The first attempt of the 1,500 Mexican Federal troops to re-take Agua Prieta from the 1,000 rebels resulted in failure. The battle raged steadily four hours, the Federals crossing the open country and assaulting the rebel trenches.

Twenty insurgents dead, have been brought into Agua Prieta, and it is said the federals' losses are heavier.

Bullets fell in a veritable hail in sections of Douglas.

From the beginning of the battle, regardless of the warning given by the United States Government to the leaders of both forces a rain of bullets poured into the American town of Douglas, and when the day was over it was found that seven non-combatant residents of that city had been wounded. It was a day almost of terror in Douglas.

At 2 o'clock the rebels appeared to have repulsed the federal forces at every point. About this time three rebel scouts, mounted and carrying the scarlet sashes flying from both arms, which designates them on the field of battle, dashed out of the south extremity of Agua Prieta and made a wide detour toward the east and north, completing their area of observation at the international boundary without drawing the fire of the Government troops.

This indicated that the rebels had been successful in keeping the federals from gaining access to that locality immediately south of border, which would have possible a flank movement against Agua Prieta.

The U. S. guard at the line captured late yesterday three stragglers from the rebel garrison who had crossed the border.

Elpidio Arce, a Mexican, was on the roof of a house on Sixth street when a bullet struck his instep.

The fifth non-combatant to be wounded yesterday in Douglas, Jesus Alcantara, a Mexican, was shot while near the eastern limits of the city, eight blocks from the international line. His leg was pierced by a mauser bullet.

At four o'clock the firing, except that of a desultory nature, had ceased to the south of Agua Prieta.

A force thought to be Yaqui Indians, crawled forward on their hands and knees, from bush to bush, during the afternoon, and at 3.45 p.m. had approached to within 300 yards of the rebel trenches. At this distance they shot from his horse a rebel captain commanding a squad in the trenches.

Frank Williams, an American, while standing in the very centre of the business quarter of Douglas, late yesterday, was wounded in the back by a Mauser bullet, and will probably die. His wife and child were standing by him when he was shot.

A Mauser bullet struck the front of the city water commissioner's office in Eleventh street, twelve blocks from the international line.

Another was added late yesterday to the list of Americans shot in Douglas, making seven in all. The latest was John Keith, employed by the Douglas Lumber Co. He was shot through the leg while in Eighth street, nine blocks from the line. He was taken to the Red Cross hospital.

Bullets fell as far north as Twelfth street, which is 13 full blocks from the Mexican border, and came thicker as evening came on.

The federals, though they left their machine guns behind, retired in good order. Every indication points to a resumption of fighting. If the federals should prove successful, it means that the battle will be carried to the streets of Agua Prieta with increasing menace to the citizens of Douglas.

Douglas, Ariz., April 18.—Balasario Garcia, commander of the rebels at Agua Prieta, surrendered himself to Capt. Genjot of the First United States cavalry at 8.35 o'clock last night. He came to the line and explained that he was giving himself into the custody of the U.S. authorities as an individual, and not as commander of the rebels.

Boat Capsized by Tide.

New York, April 18.—A tiny rowboat, filled with a party of eight Italians, capsized in the swirl of the tide through the narrow neck of Long Island Sound, separating Forts Totten and Schuyler, yesterday afternoon, and of its human burden three bodies have been recovered, one is missing and four were rescued. A six months' infant, torn from its mother's breast, was held above the waves by its swaddling clothes, rescued and rushed to Flushing Hospital, where it will recover.

Twenty-One Are Drowned.

Oporto, Portugal, April 18.—The Spanish steamer San Fernando, bound from Huelva for Liverpool, sank off Finisterre, the western-most headland of Spain, yesterday.

Twenty-one persons were drowned. Four survivors were landed here by the steamer Portimao.

Farmers to State Case.

Washington, April 18.—Two train loads of western farmers are coming to Washington in a month or so to appear before the Senate Committee on finance in opposition to Canadian reciprocity.

Reports reaching Washington indicate that there will be a big delegation from Minnesota, Montana and the Dakotas, and that an extensive hearing on the subject will be demanded.

Oil Fuel a Success.

Montreal, April 18.—A telegram was received at C.P.R. headquarters yesterday from Wm. Whyte, vice-president of the company in Winnipeg, stating that the company's steamship Princess May had just completed one round trip from Vancouver to Skagway with oil fuel, and that the results were very satisfactory.

London, Ont., April 18.—The will of Miss Bridget de. Dewan, who died here several days ago, leaves her estate, valued at $75,000 to various institutions of the Roman Catholic Church in this city.

LADIES ARE INDIGNANT

Montreal Women Were Stopped at the United States Line—Official's Side of the Case

SHOULD HAVE CERTIFICATE

Montreal, April 18.—A number of Montrealers who took part in the Easter excursions to New York had the unpleasant experience of being held up at the border and compelled to delay their trip for a day before being given permission to enter the United States. Among those Montrealers were Mrs. D. E. Ferguson and Mrs. F. Heimer.

John H. Clark, the United States commissioner of immigration, in discussing the subject yesterday, said there was nothing unusual in a number of excursions being delayed in this way.

"I wish you would make it perfectly plain," he said, "that the delay means no reflection whatever on the character of the individuals concerned. Our officials have very strict instructions in regard to this matter, and they have to carry them out. Their instructions are that whenever they have a doubt about a passenger they have no alternative but to refuse admission to that passenger to enter the States, until the passenger has satisfied a board of enquiry as to identity. The instructions are very strict in regard to ladies without escort, and our departments at Washington makes it obligatory on us to ascertain the destination of every such lady."

Passengers might easily avoid any such unpleasant delay, he said, by applying at the United States immigration office in Montreal, and getting a certificate of identity.

Had No Trouble In North.

Ottawa, April 18.—Referring to despatches which have been sent out from Ottawa stating that there have been attacks by starving Indians on Hudson Bay Co. posts, and that they were looking the supplies cached by the Government, Comptroller White of the R.N.W.M.P. handed the following statement to the press yesterday:

"The story is absolutely without foundation. It is the most atrocious thing I ever seen. It is absurd. The man who sent out the story is a liar. No reports have been received by the Ottawa Government indicating conditions such as are stated in the despatches. The Government have no supplies cached at various points between Churchill and Lake Winnipeg, nor have they received any reports of the intention of the Indians the halfbreeds, or the 'ferocious halfbreeds' to attack the Hudson Bay posts or the mounted police posts. There have been no skirmishes, so far as the Government is aware, between the Hudson Bay posts and the 'ferocious halfbreeds.' On the contrary, the reports state that the Hudson Bay and the halfbreeds are working harmoniously and in conformity with the Government arrangements. There are no ferocious halfbreeds in the district between the north and Lake Winnipeg and Hudson Bay."

Anglo-Americans Hold Key.

New York, April 18.—"The relations between Great Britain and the United States constitute the real key to the situation in preserving the peace of the world," said Sir Joseph Ward, Premier of New Zealand, here yesterday.

"In the British overseas dominions adjacent to the Pacific it is recognized that one of the most important questions we have to keep before us is the preserving of our territory for the British race and doing everything in our power to prevent Asiatic immigration to any great extent," said Sir Joseph. "This problem is one which also closely concerns the United States, and, in my judgement, some well-thought-out plan of Anglo-Saxon co-operation is necessary to preserve all the countries of Americas from the invasion of Asiatics."

Clergy Support Arbitration Treaty.

New York, April 18.—The clergymen of Greater New York, representative of all denominations, met here yesterday under the auspices of the Baptist Ministers' Conference and passed a resolution in support of President Taft's project for an arbitration treaty between the United States and Great Britain. Among the speakers were Rev. T. J. Villiers, D.D., president of the Baptist Ministers' Conference; Rev. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, and W. H. Short, chairman of the New York Peace Society. Copies of the resolutions will be sent to President Taft, King George, and Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary.

MacKay Lauds Borden.

Lambeth, April 18.—In the course of his address on reciprocity last night, Hon. A. G. MacKay expressed his pleasure that no little importance could be attached to the rumors of R. L. Borden's retirement.

"I think the Conservative party has reason to be proud of the high class of man who is their leader today," he said. "I think Mr. Borden is a pretty high type of man and a pretty safe sort of citizen to whom to entrust power if there should be a change of Government."

A resolution endorsing reciprocity was adopted by the meeting.

St. Catharines, Ont., April 18.—J. J. McCarthy, who up until a few years ago was one of the most active workers for the Reform party in Ontario, died at Gowanda, N.Y., Saturday afternoon, and was brought here for burial on Sunday. His saloon in Buffalo figured prominently in the famous "Jimmie M." case.

Grew Too Fast.

London, Ont., April 18.—Anthony Sidoti died Sunday at his parents' residence, 96 Fullerton street. That he grew too fast, which affected the action of his heart, is said to have been the cause of his death. Sidoti was 16 years of age, considerably over six feet tall and fairly well built.

Damming Long Sault.

Ottawa, April 18.—The project of the damming of the Long Sault Rapids is not dead by a long sight. Canadians who think this U. S. grab scheme is killed were never more mistaken in their lives. Something is due to happen any day now.

Condemn Co-operate Bills.

Montreal, April 18.—Resolutions condemning the two co-operative bills now before Parliament were adopted at the annual meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association here yesterday. The general objection raised against the bills was that they would permit irresponsible persons to collect funds from the working classes under promise that they benefit by being members of a co-operative association, which would in return sell them merchandise at reduced rates, but it was alleged that the history of these organizations in England, where they were looked upon as having socialistic tendencies, was that failure often came to their doors, and subscribers only found out later they had been duped.

Call for Tenders for Mails.

Ottawa, April 18.—The Department of Trade and Commerce has called for tenders for a mail service between Canada and Jamaica, the service to be from Halifax, N.S., (with a call at St. John, N.B., each trip), to Kingston, Jamaica, the steamers to put in on each trip at Bermuda and Turk's Island. The tenders may be for either 14, 10 or 7 days. The vessels must be of British register, and preference will be given to ships which possess cold storage facilities.

Comes Back to Montreal.

Leavenworth, Kansas, April 18.—F. Peltier, a French-Canadian, sent to the federal prison here from Fergus Falls, Minn., under a 14-months sentence for theft of mail, was arrested at the prison gate yesterday by Immigration Inspector Dunn of St. Louis for deportation to Montreal.

Without Lines in the Lens

The only near-and-far glasses that can be universally worn without discomfort and without suggestiveness of "old" appearance. The "near" and the "far" lenses are one solid glass. No "lines," no cement—and perfect sight with the discomfort and unsightliness left out. They cost more than the ordinary 'cement bifocals' but if you are particular of comfort and appearance they are worth the difference. We have scores of people in this city using these Kryptoks who are highly pleased with them.

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

"It is my turn," he cried, "Let me speak! You know—you haven't forgotten! On the Tsar's birthday, a band of students marched to the steps of the Winter Palace. They went peacefully, with trust in their hearts, no weapon in their hands. They were surrounded by Cossacks, who beat them with knouts, riding them down. They were boys, some of them hardly out of the Gymnasium, the flower of our youth, brave sons of Russia ready to fight for her and die." He hesitated and his voice broke. "At the foot of the Alexander Column, they were mown down like grass without warning, or mercy; their blood still sprinkles the stones. Many were killed, hundreds arrested, few escaped. At the head of the Cossacks rode—"

A sigh stirred the room deepening into a groan, then came a hush. Some buried their faces in their hand weeping silently behind the masks. After a while the Head raised his hand and the fourth rose, slowly, reluctantly, speaking in a woman's voice so faint and low it could scarcely make itself heard. The masks bent forward listening.

"Last week," it murmured, "the Countess Petrushka was suspected. She was torn from her home, imprisoned"—The voice grew lower and lower. "She was beaten—tortured by the guards; she never returned,—yesterday she was—buried." The voice broke into sobs. "The man who signed the paper—was"

So the trial went on amid the stillness, more and more solemn, more and more impressive, as one accusation followed the other in swift succession; the candles dropping low in their sockets, the light growing dimmer, the room larger and lower and more ghostly, the night waning.

In every case the name was left a blank; but in that strange pause, as if for judgment, the eyes of the masks sought the bier, resting with slow fascination on the words across it, gleaming scarlet beneath the flickering candles, vivid and red like blood.

The final accusation had been made The twelfth and last mask had sunk back in his chair and the leader rose. The silence was like a pall over the table. When his voice broke through, it was sharp and stern, as the voice of a judge admonishing a court.

"You have all heard," he said. "You are aware of what this man has done, is now doing, will continue to do. Does he merit to live?—Has he deserved to die? For the sake of our country, our people, ourselves, deliberate; and determine. His fate rests in the hands of the Black Cross.

He bowed his head on his breast and waited. No one moved or spoke. At the far end of the room, the candles dripped one by one on the bier, falling lower and lower. Occasionally the wax flared up, lighting the darkness; then all was dim.

Suddenly, as from some mysterious impulse, the thirteen sprang to their feet, and again their hands flashed out in that curious crisscross motion over the breast, forehead, the eyes, and a murmur went from mouth to mouth like a hiss.

"Gimepth—Death!" rising into a sound so intense, so terrifying, so muffled and suppressed and menacing, it was as the cry of an animal wounded, dying, about to spring. Falling on their knees, they remained motionless for a moment; then, following the leader each stepped forward in turn and took their places about the bier.

The ceremony that followed was strange and solemn; one that no outside eye has ever gazed on, no lips have ever dared to breathe. They stod in the shadow of death, their own and another's. Their heads were bowed. Their bodies shook and trembled. With hands raised they took the oath, terrible, relentless, overpowering, gripping them from now on as in a vice; both sexes alike, with voices spent and faint with emotion.

"In the name of the Black Cross I do now pledge myself, an instrument in the service of Justice and Retribution. On whomsoever the choice of Fate shall fall, I vow the sentence of Death shall be fulfilled, by mine own hands if needs be, without weakness, or hesitation, or mercy. And if by any untoward chance this hand should fail, I swear—I swear, before the third day shall have passed, to die instead—to die—instead."

The words ended in a whisper, low, intense, prescient of a woe not to be borne.

"I swear—I pledge myself—by mine own hands if needs be."

A sigh broke the stillness. The masks stirred, recovered themselves and bent over the bier, drawing out, one after the other, a slip of paper folded. There were thirteen slips. Twelve were blank; on one was a Black Cross graven.

They drew in silence; no start, no movement, no trembling of the muscles betrayed the one fated. Twelve drew blanks. Which of them had the Cross; which? They stared dumbly, questioningly, fearfully from one to the other. One was the assassin. Which? The answer was shrouded behind the masks.

Lower and lower the candles burned in their sockets, flickering fitfully. The room grew darker and the figures cloaked and hooded, seemed to melt back into the shadows from whence they had emerged, less and less distinct, until finally the shadow was one, more and more vapoury, filling the darkness.

Suddenly, a scream cut the silence, like a knife rough and jagged. In a twinkling the lights went out. There was a scuffling, a struggling in the corridor, cries and shouting, the sound of wood splintering, the blows of an axe,—a rushing forward of heavy bodies and the trampling of feet. The doors burst open and a cordon of police dashed over the wreckage, cursing, shouting—and then stopped on the threshold, staring in amazement and panting with mouths wide open.

"Oi!—Oi! Tysyacha chertei!"

The room was empty, dark, deserted, save for an old woman, half-witted, who was crouching on the floor before the sacred Icon, rocking herself and mumbling. They questioned her, but she was deaf and answered at random:

"Eh, gracious sirs—my lords—eh? So old—so poor, so wretched! See, there is nothing!—A copeck, for the love of heaven—half a copeck—a quarter, only a little quarter! Ah! Rioumka vodki — rioumka—vodki!"

The police brushed her aside and searched the room. In the corner was a low cot, hanging on a nail was an old cloak; on the table the remains of a black loaf and an empty cup. They searched and searched in vain; tapping the walls, tearing at the stone foundations, peering up at the rafters, tumbling over one another in their eagerness.

"Chort vozmi—!" shouted the captain. "We are on the wrong track. The scream came from the other side. Head them off! Run, men, run! Here, this passage, and then straight ahead! Devil take the old beggar! Shut up, you hag, or I'll strangle you! Head them off!"

Gradually the hurrying footsteps died away in the distance. The shouting ceased on the stairs. It was still as the grave, silent, deserted. The old woman glanced over her shoulder. She was still crouching before the Icon, rocking herself backwards and forwards; the beads of the rosary slipping through her fingers one by one; mumbling to herself.

Suddenly she stopped and listened. The rosary fell to the floor. Her eyes watched the wreckage of the doorway closely, suspiciously, like an animal before a trap. The shadows encircled her, they were here, there everywhere; but none moved, none crept.

Snatching a slip of paper from her bosom, she bent over it, her eyes dilated, her mouth twisted with agony. In the centre of the paper, clearly graven against the white, was a Black Cross.

She moaned aloud, wringing her hands. Her teeth gnawed her lips. She clung to the foot of the Icon, sobbing, struggling with herself, glancing around fearfully into the shadows. A gleam from the candle fell on her hood; it had slipped slightly and a strand of her hair hung from under the cowl. It sparkled like gold.

She staggered to her feet, still sobbing and trembling, catching her breath. Then she went to the nail on the wall and took down the cloak. The woman stood alone in the midst of the shadows; they were heavy, motionless. Glancing to right and left, behind her, to the wreckage of the door, to the furthermost corner, back to the Icon again, her eyes roved, darting from side to side like a creature hunted. Clasping the cloak of her quivering bosom she approached the candle slowly, stealthily. Her steps faltered. She hesitated. She stooped forward—another glance over her shoulder, and blowing with feeble breath, the spark went out.

CHAPTER III.

Velasco sat in his Studio before the great tiled fire-place, dreaming, with his violin across his knees. His servant had gone to bed and he was alone.

The coals burned brightly, and the lamp cast a golden, radiant light on the rug at his feet, rich-hued and jewel tinted as the stained rose windows of Notre Dame. Tapestries hung from the walls, a painting here and there, a few engravings. In the centre stood an Erard, a magnificent concert-grand, open, with music strewn on its polished lid in a confusion of sheets; some piled, some fluttering loose, still others flung to the floor, where a chance breeze, or a careless hand, may have scattered them. Near it was the exquisite bronze figure of a young satyr playing the flute, the childish arms and limbs, round and moulded, glowing rosy and warm in the lamp light. In one corner was a violin stand, a bow tossed heedlessly across it; and all about were boxes, half packed and disordered. The curtains were drawn. The malachite clock on the mantel-piece was striking two Velasco stirred suddenly and his dark head turned from the fire light, moving restlessly against the cushions. He was weary. The applause, the uproar of the Mariinski was still in his ears; before his eyes danced innumerable notes, tiny and black, the sound of them boring into his brain.

"Ye gods—ye gods!"

The young Violinist sprang up and began pacing the room, pressing his hands to his eyes to drive away the notes, humming to himself to get rid of the sound, the theme, the one haunting, irrepressible motive. He walked up and down, lighting one cigarette after the other, puffing once, twice, and then hurling it half-smoked into the coals.

Every little while he stopped and seemed to be listening. Then he went back to his seat before the fire-place and flinging himself down began to play, a few bars at a time, stopping and listening, then playing again. As he played, his eyes grew dreamy and heavy, the brows seemed to press upon them until they drooped under the lids, and his dark hair fell like a screen.

When he stopped, a strange, moody look came over his face and he frowned, tapping the rug nervously with his foot. Sometimes he held the violin between his knees, playing on it as on a cello; then he caught it to his breast again in a sudden fury of improvisation—an arpeggio, light and running, his fingers barely touching the strings—the snatch of a theme—a thrill, low and passionate—the rush of a scale. He toyed with the Stradivarius mocking it, clasping it, listening.

His overwrought nerves were as pinpoints pricking his body. His brain was like a church, the organ of music filling it, thundering, reverberating, dying away; and then, as he lay back exhausted, low, subtle, insinuating ran the theme in his ears, the maddening motive.

Beside him was a stand, with a decanter of red wine and a glass. The wine was lustrous and sparkling. He drank of it and lit another cigarette and threw it away. Presently Velasco took from his pocket a twist of paper blotted, and studied it, with his head in his hands.

"Will you help me—life or death—to-night? Kaya."

He listened again.

BLOOD BAD IN THE WINTER

Indoor Life, Too Little Exercise, Breathing Impure Air, Eating Artificial Foods.

Is it any wonder that the system becomes poisoned with impure waste matter in the winter time, when you think of the artificial life we lead?

With doors and windows tight shut we breathe the same air over and over again until it is incapable of purifying the blood.

In vain effort to cast the poisons out of the system the liver and kidneys are worked over time until they too are played out. Then comes the pains in the back, the headaches, the attacks of constipation and indigestion.

The quickest and most certain way to overcome this condition is by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They act definitely and directly on the liver and kidneys, awaken them to renew energy in filtering poisons from the bowels and remove the cause of indigestion, backache and other body pains.

You are not experimenting when you use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They are unique in their combined action on the liver and kidneys and for this reason stand without a rival as a means of purifying the blood and cleansing the filtering and digestive systems.

THAT AWFUL BACKACHE

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have the backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

THAT WRITING WOMAN

A Short Story

Mr. Herrison was enjoying the luxury of a railway carriage all to himself. For the time of the year the weather was beneath criticism, and snow lying on the ground at the end of March was not an incentive to travelling. Even in busier parts of the country those who could remained at home, and the unassuming line patronised by Mr. Herrison wound lazily through a sleepy district, where even in pleasant weather travellers were few. Only one first-class carriage was provided, and of that he had taken possession, which remained undisputed until the arrival of the train at a small station where an unusually long pause was made.

"Hullo, guard!" said Mr. Herrison, putting his head out of the window. "What are we waiting for?"

"Passengers from Oaks Manor," responded the official amiably. "Sometimes they come, and sometimes they don't; but we always allow them an extra quarter of an hour. There, you see, that's Lord Oaks's carriage coming up the road; so it's as well we didn't go on."

The guard moved off, and Mr. Herrison, still looking out of the window, observed that only one person—a lady—was dropped by Lord Oaks's carriage. It seemed scarcely worth while to have waited so long in so Arctic an atmosphere, but there are circumstances in which a man does not like to be unduly captious, and Mr. Herrison's tendencies were towards sociability. Apparently the lady's were not equally so.

"Only one first, and somebody in it!" he distinctly heard her say. "I suppose it can't be helped. Please put these things into the carriage; the rest may go in the van."

By this time Mr. Herrison had withdrawn his head, and retired to the other end of the carriage; and presently a porter flung in a strap of rugs, a bundle of hooks and papers, a japanned bonnet-box, and an enormous basket of hothouse flowers.

The lady followed, and busied herself in arranging her belongings as the train made convulsive efforts to leave the station. She was young, pretty and well-dressed, and had a remarkably sweet voice and refined intonation. Mr. Herrison rose to help her with her parcels, and received a flashing smile and a graceful word of thanks for his pains. Evidently she was ready to be consoled for not being able to travel alone, although she might have preferred doing so if she had been given a choice in the matter.

"Ghastly weather," he remarked, assisting to unfasten the rug-strap.

"Awful," she agreed cordially. "I wonder how long to takes to reach Everton at this rate of traveling?"

"About two hours, I should say. I am going to Everton myself. Are you, by any chance, bound for Mrs. Hamilton's?"

"Yes. And you?"

"Also yes. Mr. Hamilton is my sister. I asked because I happened to know that she is expecting several guests to stay over Easter. She has great faith in spring house parties, and is always preaching about their superiority to autumn ones."

"I daresay she is right. But one can't call this sort of thing spring. I dare say a great deal of amusement may be found in snowballing."

"Undoubtedly. The worst of it is that my sister generally gets together the sort of people who don't know how to be frivolous."

"Have you any idea who is expected this time?"

"I have," he answered confidentially, "and I venture to say that you and I will be allowed to keep the snowballing all to ourselves. There's a superannuated German professor, a gouty General with a fat wife, a Bishop on sick leave, a lady who lectures on woman's rights, a long-haired male poet, and an undescribed female novelist."

"Have you met any of these people?"

"Only the General and his wife, and the Bishop. The rest are literary celebrities, and of such I always keep as clear as possible."

"Dear me! Why? They interest me, as a rule."

"Really? Then I should feel glad that you have a fair prospect of being entertained. My small personal experience leads me to regard them as poseurs who are incapable of conversation. Literary people are about the worst talkers I know. And they are invariably filled with a good conceit of themselves."

"I shouldn't have thought it," said the girl: "but I dare say you know more about them than I do."

Her eyes were innocent and trustful, and Mr. Herrison felt encouraged to continue the riding of his hobby.

"The male celebrities are bad enough," he asserted dogmatically, "but the females are worse. I know exactly what that writing woman that my sister has got hold of will be like. She will wear pince-nez." The girl rubbed her pretty little nose delicately and appeared to be deeply interested. "Her hair will be severely turned back from an extremely high forehead." Involuntarily the girl patted a remarkably well arranged fringe. "She will have huge feet, and, even so, will wear boots a size too large." The girl glanced down at a particularly neat shoe; and following the direction of her eyes, Mr. Herrison noted admiringly the beautiful arch of her instep. Indeed he had been marking her in parcels, and was in considerable danger of falling in love at first sight. Her thumb and the second finger of her right hand will always bear traces of an ill-conducted fountain pen," he continued: and the girl drew off her right glove, and examined her fingertips critically. Mr. Herrison thought her hand the prettiest and whitest he had ever seen. "She will dress vilely in some exaggerated fashion that accentuates all her natural de-

"Poor woman!" murmured the girl. But you have concerned yourself to prophesy only of outward and visible signs. Inwardly and spiritually she may be very beautiful."

"Not she! There's her book to bear testimony."

"Oh! What book?"

"'The Murmurs of Minerva.' It is unrelievedly dull."

"How sad! Did it bore you dreadfully to read it?"

"No, because I didn't read it."

"Then how do you know it is unrelievedly dull?"

"The St. Paul's Gazette said so."

"But the Piccadilly Gazette said it was very amusing. How is one to know which is right? I suppose only by reading and judging for one's self."

"Well, perhaps I ought to have done so." He was ready to be convinced by any words falling from that perfect mouth. "If I am obliged to take her in to dinner she will be sure to ask me if I have read it."

"Hardly, I think, unless you first give an opinion on it as you did to me just now."

"By Jove! Perhaps I have been speaking unadvisedly with my lips. I detect a defensive note. Is the lady a friend of yours?"

"I don't think I should describe her exactly as a friend, but I know her, and I like fairness."

"You should have checked me sooner. I have inadvertently offended you."

"Not at all. And you need not be alarmed. I shant repeat anything you have said."

"More generosity than I deserve! Is her name really Lindsay Gordon, or is that only a nom-de-plume?" he asked as if fatefully constrained to pursue the subject.

"It is her real name, and a very convenient to write under, as it did not betray her sex in the beginning. I believe we have actually reached Everton, and in the regulation time after all."

"Let us hope that the officials concerned may not die to-night. Allow me to help you. There's the Everton Hall carriage waiting—also the dog-cart. Of course the dog-cart is intended for me, but—will you be kind and let me share the carriage with you?"

"Certainly. I belong to the R.S.P.C.A. and it would come under the head of cruelty to animals to condemn you to a long drive in an open trap on such a day as this."

"Ah! Yours is nothing less than a spirit of universal charity. It radiated kindness on 'The Murmurs of Minerva,' and—me. By the way, I really must get that book at once and inwardly digest it. Do you happen to have a copy with you?"

"No,' I am sorry I can't oblige you. Perhaps Mrs. Hamilton has one."

"I'll ask her directly we get in, and then I'll shut myself up with it until dinner time. But I wish you would give me your opinion of it—for guidance."

"I don't see why you should want guidance. Form your own opinion, and then we can exchange and discuss. I don't pretend to be a good judge."

"But I've no doubt that you are one—without pretence. You tripped me up famously about those reviews, you know."

He spoke as if giving her a little necessary encouragement, and she let her eyes drop because she felt they were overflowing with mischief.

During the five miles drive from the station to Everton Hall this rashly formed acquaintance progressed by leaps and bounds; and before his sister's home was reached, Mr. Herrison found himself considering what would be the period of time demanded by decency to elapse between a first meeting and an offer of marriage. Twenty four hours seemed to him an excessive allowance; but his sense of humour was sufficient to enable him to laugh at his own suddenness, and it struck him as a matter for amusement that he did not even know the name of the lady whom he intended to make his wife—if he could. His ears were on the alert for it when Mrs. Hamilton met them in the hall; but, unfortunately for the satisfaction of his curiosity, his sister called the new arrival nothing but "dear," and that did not amount to much in the way of enlightenment.

"What awful weather!" Mrs. Hamilton said. "You must have had a perfectly dreadful journey. I'm sure you would like a good long rest before dinner. You must go and lie down, and I will send tea to your room."

"Thank you," said the girl. "The journey was neither very long nor very dreadful, but I feel quite lazy enough to accept your offer."

"Will you indulge me to the same extent?" Mr. Herrison asked his sister. "I am prepared to appreciate tea in my room; but even if you don't give it to me I'm going to disappear until dinner time, and I want 'The Murmurs of Minerva' to take with me, if you please."

"You ought to be ashamed," she said, "to acknowledge that you have not read it yet. There it is—on that table. I have to keep two copies in the house," she added, turning to her young friend, "it so often happens that two of my guests want to read it at the same time."

The girl smiled in an uninterested manner, and turned the conversation to something else as she tore herself away from the blazing logs in the hall, and began to ascend the stairs with her hostess; but directly they were out of Mr. Herrison's sight she whispered eagerly, "Please don't betray me, dear Mrs. Hamilton. Your brother hasn't the least idea who I am and I want, for once, to get an honest opinion about my book from a non-literary man. You understand what I mean?—a fair representative of the British public."

Mrs. Hamilton loved a little mystery and a little scheming, and jumped at this excellent reason for indulging her tastes.

"I'll send you in to dinner with him," she promised. "Do you say you don't know his name? George Herrison. I'll take it for granted that she knows yours, and give him no opportunity for asking awkward questions. I'll bet you a pair of gloves he'll have the book finished before dinner. He's the most rapid reader I know. Now here's your room, and your boxes are up. Take a good rest and look lovely to-night. We are expecting some people besides the house party, and you are my bright particular star."

"Thank you. I'll do my best to shine; but electric light goes down ever so much better than starlight, I assure you. Whatever you do, don't introduce anyone to me in Mr. Herrison's presence."

"Trust me. I know what I'm about. I must fly now. I came away from the Bishop to meet you, and he's in a horrid temper."

Left to herself, the girl, who had not brought a maid with her, did her own unpacking, drank her tea, wrote a few notes, and finally took an hour's beauty sleep before dressing for dinner. Working hard, as she was accustomed to do, she understood the necessity for rest, and knowing that she would be late in bed that night, and up early next morning, she took her afternoon sleep as she might have taken a tonic. The effect was all that could be desired, and she came down to the drawing-room looking brilliant enough to satisfy her hostess.

Mr. Herrison did not appear until the very last minute before dinner, and his sister thanked her stars that he had relieved her of a difficulty by giving himself no time to ask questions.

"You take in your travelling companion," she said, passing him hurriedly; and he made his way to the side of the Star who was shining as the other end of the room.

"I am fortunate," he said, hardly knowing that he looked as pleased as he looked. "Even in the most learned circles there is mercy to be found."

"You imply that you have been mercifully paired off with the only ignorant and therefore the only congenial woman in the house?"

"Now, who said anything about ignorance? In order to avoid being a blue stocking it isn't necessary for a woman to be ignorant. What I said implied only satisfaction with my fate, and intense relief to find that I had not been relegated to the Woman's Rights lady, or—Oh, by the bye, has Lindsay Gordon arrived yet?"

"I don't see her," said the girl, looking carefully round the room. Were you awfully afraid that you would have had to take her in?"

"More so than ever, since I have been instructing myself in 'The Murmurs of Minerva.' It's too horribly clever for anything. If I were obliged to sit next the woman who wrote it I believe I should wriggle on my chair from pure nervousness. As for talking to her, I shouldn't dare it. Fancy hazarding a simple remark about the unusual condition of the thermometer to a woman who can't write a page without at least three epigrams in it!"

"But I suppose she feels the cold like everybody else, therefore the thermometer should have a certain amount of interest for her."

"Certainly not, unless one could say something very deep or very witty about it; and, even if I were given that way in general—which I need hardly inform you I am not—I couldn't do it to save my life if I thought it was expected of me."

"Such modesty must be a painful possession."

"I find it so very often in this house."

They were seated at table now, and he sighed plaintively over his soup, glancing in the direction of the German professor.

"Then you found 'The Murmurs of Minerva' on the whole rather oppressive?"

"On the contrary—most stimulating—most enlivening! It very nearly made me late for dinner. But then I was able to enjoy it, as I should not be able to enjoy it, as I should not be able to enjoy the authoress—without feeling idiotic because of a vain effort to live up to its correspondents, and also without fear of my idiosyncrasies being noted for copy. Lindsay Gordon is such a keen observer of character that it would be impossible for anyone morally below the degree of a full-fledged angel to live comfortably in her presence."

"In that case she should have a very bracing effect on character. I hope she will succeed in keeping you up to the celestial standard—when you know her."

"Ah! Heaven help me! Let's hope she has caught the influenza and isn't coming. She ought to have arrived by this time, and one may infer all sorts of good things from her non-appearance."

"What an ungrateful man you are! All this afternoon you have been accepting and enjoying the best she could give you, and yet you haven't the least desire to thank her for it."

"You are mistaken. I have the very greatest desire; but I should prefer to do it from a distance. And, to balance matters, I shouldn't mind meeting at close quarters the man who reviews for, St. Paul's Gazette. I want to hear him account for his assertion that 'The Murmurs of Minerva' is unrelievedly dull. I can't account for it. Can you?"

"Well, the book has a distinct purpose, as of course you have discovered, and the St. Paul's Gazette is antagonistic to that purpose, therefore it was slated all round. It is a beautifully simple method. One review may lose a book hundreds of readers merely by labelling it dull."

"You seem to know a good deal about it," he remarked, tentatively.

"I have friends who write," she said; "and they often talk shop to me. I find it interesting."

"Perhaps you write yourself?"

"Well, yes. A little. Are you very much shocked?"

He gave her a look that spoke volumes; and, seeing that she interpreted and blushed very prettily, he went a step farther in daring and murmured a line from an old song:

"Whatever she does, it will sure be right."

The truth that he was in earnest flashed across his companion, and she blushed more vividly than before. It did not for a moment occur to her to observe his idiosyncrasies with a view to copy. She liked him so far, and the suddenness of the thing flattered her. She thought it not impossible that she might like him better before long. She was well accustomed to admiration; but her other admirers knew her to be a celebrity, and she had a thoroughly feminine appreciation of the fact that this man was attracted only by her person and personality. She abruptly turned the conversation away from writers, and drew him out on other subjects, finally deciding that he was one of the most agreeable men she had met for a long time.

When the ladies left the dining-room, Mr. Herrison found himself sitting next the Bishop whom he had described as being on sick leave—a dyspeptic ecclesiastic who had just dined off toast and soda-water.

"How does our voting authoress strike you?" asked the Bishop. "Not so dangerous as she looks, I hope? Personally I object very strongly to 'The Murmurs of Minerva.' Lindsay Gordon is inclined to deny the church its due need of respect, and expresses her opinions more freely than a woman should; but she is undoubtedly a clever writer. Do you find her equally brilliant as a conversationalist?"

"Can't say. I haven't had the pleasure of meeting her," said Mr. Herrison, with an expression of countenance which the Bishop chose to consider imbecile.

"My dear fellow! Whom did you take in to dinner?"

"Upon my word, I don't know her name," Mr. Herrison admitted, feeling thoroughly foolish. "We arrived together—made acquaintance travelling—and so it came about that my sister did not introduce us. Can you tell me who she is?"

"Why, Lindsay Gordon, of course. I can't fancy how you avoided making the discovery. She's—"

The Bishop had a great deal more to say, but five minutes later Mr. Herrison was in the drawing-room. He found it difficult to reach Lindsay Gordon, who was surrounded by a crowd of enthusiastic women eagerly worshipping the ascendant star, but his sister was lying in wait to assist the development of the situation, and after due waiting he managed to get a few words alone with his fellow traveller.

"May I hope ever to be forgiven?" he asked. And the enigmatical answer she made was.

"Who told you?"

"The Bishop. First I felt inclined to kill him and then I felt inclined to kill myself. Now, I suppose you feel inclined to kill me. Well, I can't help it. I got what I wanted—your honest opinion of the Murmurs of Minerva."

"You have got more than that," he said in a low voice.—"Whether you want it or not."

She blushed again, and talked rather fast to cover her confusion.

"Don't think I am without remorse," she said. "I felt dreadfully sorry for you when I found that you were actually doomed to take "that writing woman' in to dinner. I was momentarily expecting you to collapse under the responsibility of entertaining a creature who was conceited and a bad talker, ill-dressed, and obviously decorated with pince-nez, a high forehead, big feet and inky fingers. I will make reparation if possible, but—what can I do?"

"You can have mercy," he said. And she took the hint.

It was not her way to pursue an advantage beyond reasonable limits; nevertheless, when he told her three days later all that was in his heart, she could not resist the temptation to ask him if he felt resigned to the prospect of wriggling on his chair for the rest of his life, or if he believed himself to have attained to the degree of a full-fledged angel and looked forward accordingly to comfort in the future.

His answer was not a very direct one, but it appeared to satisfy her, and he thought himself that it could scarcely be improved upon.

NERVE STRAIN

Doctors tell us that a vast percentage of the breakdowns and troubles to-day are from overworked, undernourished nerves. We Americans strain every nerve in our body trying to make a success in life, and do not nourish and feed our nervous system so as to make it equal to the strain; the result is we are broken-down old men and women before we are forty years of age. The nerve tissues must be fed and strengthened, the stomach must be assisted in doing the work of digesting the food, the blood must be enriched and circulation quickened, the body and brain must be invigorated, so that we can withstand the strain and retain health, strength and youth.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, the world's most reliable tonic-stimulant and strength builder, is an ideal remedial agent for nervous people or any one under a nervous strain. It quiets the nerves and starts the gastric juices so that the food can be digested. It is a food in itself that gives strength and fills the blood with bright red corpuscles.

Doctors and other scientists all over America know that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey does wonders in aiding the digestion and assimilation of the food and in bringing vigor to the body.

It is sold in SEALED BOTTLES ONLY by all liquor dealers or direct, $1.25 a large bottle. Look for the "Old Chemist" on the label and make sure the seal over the cork is unbroken. Medical booklet containing rare common-sense rules for health and testimonials, also doctor's advice, sent free to any one who writes.

ONTARIO MILK

From Farm and Dairy.

Further reports received from Farm and Dairy correspondents strengthen the belief that more milk will be produced in Ontario in 1911 than in 1910. Only one report, that from Frontenac county, reports any scarcity of feed. Feed is plentiful and cows have come through the winter in good condition for work this season. The dissatisfaction of patrons over the low prices received for cheese last season is also emphasized and in many sections more milk will be made into butter at home than formerly. The shipment of cream to the United States which is still going on in many sections, is also proving more profitable than cheese making. These factors with the larger amount of milk that will be sent to creameries will tend to relieve the situation so far as cheese is concerned.

Milch cows are reported as scarce and very high in price. Several correspondents state that cows are selling too high when the price of dairy produce is considered. In spite of high prices, however, many farmers have increased their herds 20 to 50 per cent. The reports of a few of Farm and Dairy's correspondents follow:

The number of cows is on the increase. As the American butter market is glutted, more cheese will be made.—J. D. McPhail, Russell Co., Ont.

About the same amount of milk will be produced this year as last. The number of cows is practically the same and there is very little feed on hand.—G. A. Smith, Frontenac Co.

The make of cheese should be large this year. The pastures were covered up with snow last fall before the ground was frozen and where the snow is off they look quite green already. Most patrons propose to milk more cows.—Robt. J. McLaughlin, Lennox and Addington Co.

More cows will be milked this year. If the season is good therefore we ought to have more milk.—W. A. Foster, Prince Edward Co.

The majority of my patrons are endeavoring to have more milk this coming season.—G. H. Barton, Peterboro Co.

Milk will show an increase of 20 per cent. over last year.—W. O. Webster, York Co.

There is lots of feed in this section and cows are in good shape.—Wm. McIntyre, Dufferin Co.

About the same number of cows will be milked this season as last.—Geo. B. Brodie, Middlesex Co.

Dairying is on the increase although the cheese industry does not show any signs of development on account of low prices.—C. White, Lambton Co.

THE RAG TAGS AND BOB TAIL

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—The Tiny Tads are failures when they try to cook, I guess;
They try to boil some coffee, but it's nothing but a mess.

2—They see a Coffee-potter who is slowly passing by;
"We'll catch some Cup-and-sauserpents and have a drink," they cry.

3—They see some little Demi-tasps, but these are hard to catch,
Because they disappear behind a thick Zebramble patch.

4—Some funny Bric-a-braccons in a tree attract their gaze;
They stop and look at them a while and watch their funny ways.

5—One of them tumbles from a branch and breaks a chip right out.
"That was a Bric-a-braccident," the Tiny Tads all shout.

"It was a Coffeece!" cry the Tiny Tads aghast.

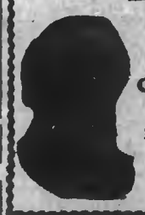
PEOPLE'S PULPIT.



Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

Why a Resurrection?

What If the Dead Should Not Rise, Would This Affect Christian Faith and Doctrines?

London, April 16.—The London Tabernacle was crowded to hear Pastor Russell's Easter sermon on "The Resurrection Hope the Only One." His text was from I. Corinthians xv, 12-18:

"How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? . . . If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain and your faith is also vain. . . . Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." He said:

For years God's people have had excellent Bibles, and thus have been blessed far in advance of our brethren who lived during the Dark Ages. But we have read our Bibles too carelessly and often have most of us wondered at the great stress St. Paul laid upon the resurrection. Rarely is the subject preached upon now and rarely is it ever thought of except as an absurdity. The reason for this is not far to seek. From childhood we have been taught that nobody is dead—that in dying everybody, good and bad, becomes more alive than ever before; that this aliveness, to the saintly few, means spiritual powers and an immediate entrance into heaven, death being swallowed up in life. The unsaintly masses also, we are told, have quickened sensibilities after dying—they became more alive, more able to appreciate and suffer pain.

Our Catholic neighbors tell us that the majority immediately go to Purgatory, there to be tried by various sufferings and tortures, and later, enter heaven. Our Protestant teachings have been to the effect that the unsaintly masses, unfit for the presence of God and the holy, will be consigned to an eternity of awful torture and made very much more alive to suffering than before. Thus we have been taught to believe that death is a portal or door into an intenser life—that nobody is dead. Many of us perplexed ourselves, and were perplexed by others, with questions respecting how there could be a "resurrection of the dead" if nobody is dead. We avoided the question, or gave the answer, "Mystery; go run and play."

Some, indeed, attempted a patchwork of the matter and told us that those in heaven were happy, but not so happy as though they had bodies and that after thousands of years of craving for a body (which they had used for only a few years), they would get it back again for all eternity. Others said, "No, our bodies have been only a clog and a hindrance and from the moment of death we will be better off without them; and we do not know why the Bible should teach a resurrection of the dead, to get back bodies that we would be glad to be rid of." Respecting the wicked, we said that after roasting for centuries without a body, then, to intensify their pain, the body would be resurrected and they would have double suffering. What bosh! What foolishness! Is it any wonder that many of the bright minds of the world learned to doubt everything connected with religion and the Bible? Rather the wonder is that, seeing things so obscurely, we did not all repudiate everything.

With the clearing of the mists of ignorance and superstition, with a better light reflected from one page to another of the Bible, the resurrection subject clarifies and the statements of Jesus and the Apostles and Prophets, which we thought so strange, become luminous and soul-satisfying.

When once we see that "the wages of sin is death" and not eternal torment; and that the Bible hell is the tomb and not a fiery furnace; and that all mankind go to sheol, to hades, just as did our Saviour; then we begin to see that what we all need is to be saved from sheol, from hades, as was the Saviour. A resurrection-salvation is thus the salvation hope of the Church and of the world.

What a relief this gives us as respects parents, children, neighbors, friends and the heathen, who have died out of Christ, unsaintly! What comfort it brings to know that they are sleeping in the great prison-house of death, unconscious of the lapse of time, waiting for the Redeemer, Who will as King set up His Kingdom in glory, associating His Bride with Himself for the blessing of all the families of the earth. The bringing forth of the prisoners out of the prison-house of death will be to set before them under the glorious provisions of the New Dispensation an opportunity for life everlasting, by obedience to the laws of the Kingdom under the assistance of the Heavenly One—the alternative being, not eternal torment, but death — Second Death.

Some one may say, "Pastor Russell, what about the soul? If the body goes to sheol, hades, the tomb, where goes the soul?" I reply that it is the soul that goes to sheol, to hades, the tomb, the state of death. Although the words sheol and hades are translated hell, nevertheless they refer, not to the mound of earth, which is in the nature of a monument, but to the secret, hidden condition, preferably styled the tomb, the abyss.

The Prophet David wrote, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol (the tomb, the state of death), nor suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption" (Psalm xvi. 10). St. Peter quoted this on the day of Pentecost and explained that it is a prophecy in respect to Christ Jesus. David's soul was not delivered from sheol, and he did see corruption, and his sepulchre the Apostle could refer to. But he, being a Prophet, spoke those words respecting Jesus, that His soul would not be left in sheol; that His soul would not see corruption. St. Peter says that this prophecy was fulfilled to our Lord—in that He was raised from the dead on the third day. He tells us that Jesus was put to death in the flesh, but quickened in spirit—a spirit being far above angels and principalities and powers and every name that is named. Our Common Version Bible declares that our Lord's soul was saved from hell—hades (Acts ii, 27-31).

David, in the Old Testament, used the word sheol. St. Peter, in the New Testament, used the word hades. There is no dispute amongst scholars as to what is signified. The words sheol and hades are well known to refer, not to a place of suffering or torture or animation of any kind, but to the unconsciousness of the death state. Jesus arose from the dead, from hades, the grave, and, not from a place of torment. The so-called Apostles' Creed declares that Jesus descended into hell, but arose from the dead on the third day. All scholars know that nothing in the words sheol and hades has any relationship to fire or pain or suffering or consciousness, and thus this phrase of the Apostles' Creed is universally explained.

As Jesus descended into hades, so do all mankind. As the Father raised Him from the dead on the third day, so it is promised that He will raise us, the Church, from the dead. More than this, the unjust also, those who have not been approved of God in the present life, shall all be awakened from the sleep of death. They will come forth informed respecting sin, having lived under the reign of Sin and Death. They will come forth that they may learn the ways of righteousness, the reward of which is life everlasting. The glorified Jesus and His glorified Church, the Bride, will be the Royal Priesthood, whose special work for a thousand years will be the uplifting of mankind, not only from the tomb, but also to perfection of life, "every man in his own order" or rank. The uplifting will bless as many as are willing, lifting them from the degradation and meanness and imperfection into which all have fallen by one man's disobedience, under the laws of heredity.

In the poetic language of the hymn, Christ Jesus "burst the bars of death" in His resurrection. It was not possible for Him to be holden of death, writes the Apostle (Acts ii, 24). The Divine verdict went forth that He had been faithful and that to Him should come the reward of life upon the highest plane — the divine nature (Ephesians i, 20, 21).

Our fancies may legitimately picture that the holy angels marveled at the Redeemer's experiences from the time that He left the heavenly glory and was made flesh and dwelt amongst us until, by His resurrection change, He returned again from the earthly nature to the heavenly plane, "far above angels." As they sang at His nativity a rapturous song of glad tidings of great joy to all people, so they were filled with amasement, surely, at how the Father permitted Him to be tempted and tried and poured for Him His cup of suffering, which He drained to the dregs. They marveled when "He died, the Just for the unjust." They looked and wondered, as hour after hour He remained in the tomb—dead. Their loyalty to the Heavenly Father was tested during that period, but was rewarded when they beheld that Divine power raised Him up even to a more excellent glory than that which He had before.

With what alacrity the angels must have acknowledged the risen One, in harmony with the Father's declaration, "Let all the angels of God worship Him." "Worthy is the Lamb to receive glory and honor, dominion, might and power." The point to be specially noticed is the change of nature which our Redeemer experienced in His resurrection. That change did not take place during the three days of Jesus' burial, but during the three and a half years of His ministry, which ended with His resurrection. When thirty years of age He gave (Unself—He surrendered His earthly privileges and rights and hopes into the Father's hands, to be obedient to everything which Divine providence might permit. At that moment His sacrifice of His flesh was accepted. The evidence of its acceptance was the impartation of the Holy Spirit, which as a dove rested upon Him and exercised a quickening and illuminating influence upon His mind, enabling Him to understand more than human things and to perform more than human acts.

It was Jesus, a New Creature, begotten of the Spirit at Jordan, that did the mighty works of the Father. His flesh, His humanity, was gradually laid down sacrificially, in harmony with the Divine providences. He drank "the cup" which the Father poured for Him.

This Easter Sunday celebrates the momentous event of our Lord's resurrection from the dead. His resurrection is either a truth or a falsehood. In our text St. Paul assures us that if it is untrue, our faith, our hopes, our preaching and teachings are of no avail—useless. If the resurrection of the dead is impossible, then the resurrection of Jesus was impossible. If the resurrection of Jesus did not take place, then we have no proof, and no ground for disbelieving, that Divine power could resurrect the Church. If Divine Power brought again from the dead the great Shepherd of the sheep," it is Jehovah also who will bring us from the dead by Jesus, in God's due time.

Let none avoid the question! Let all decide at once! Either we believe in a resurrection from the dead, or we do not believe in it. If the resurrection be a myth then, says the Apostle, all those who fell asleep with faith in Christ are perished—they are not in heaven, Purgatory nor eternal torment. If we believe in the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust, then, naturally, we must believe that they are dead, except in the Divine promise, purpose, arrangement. The decision of this resurrection question is a most momentuous one, as it affects practically every doctrine of the Christian Church. If we get straight the doctrine of the Ransom effected through the Redeemer, and the doctrine of the Resurrection of the dead, all of our doctrines will fall into line, and all of our absurdities, which have troubled us so long, will fall out of the way, and all of the Scriptures will be found harmonious in teaching Divine Justice, Wisdom, Love and Power.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept" (verse 20). Ah, thank God, the Apostle did not mean to insinuate the possibility of our Lord's not having risen. Merely, he would put the question that we might see how weighty is the subject — how much depends on the answer. He exultantly answers, "Christ is risen!" We rejoice in this for several reasons. First, how sad it would be if He who laid aside His glory and was made flesh and tasted death on our behalf should have lost by His loyal endeavor to serve us and to do the Father's will! How glad we are that He is risen, and that He was not raised again in the flesh, with the loss of His heavenly glory, but raised as the King of all, far above all others, and partaker of the divine nature!

Secondly, we are glad on our own account, and on account of all mankind; for if our Lord Jesus had not been raised from the dead it would have proven one of two things—either that He had not been faithful—up to the Divine standard, and therefore that His life could not be a satisfaction for the human life lost in Adam, or else it would have proved that God, who had promised to raise Him from the dead if He would be obedient unto death, had been unable to do so; and, if unable to raise Him from the dead, we, likewise, would be without hope, even if our sins were cancelled by virtue of His sacrifice.

The Apostle's words give a further suggestion: Our Lord in His resurrection became "the first-fruits of them that slept." This signifies that none was ever raised from the dead before Him. As another Scripture declares, "He was the first that should arise from the dead." There were indeed others awakened from the tomb, by Jesus Himself and also previous to His Advent. But they were merely awakened, not lifted fully up out of death conditions to perfect life. The Redeemer was the first to have such an experience. But the Apostle's words mean more. If Jesus was the first-fruits of them that slept, there must of necessity be after-fruits. And this the Apostle proceeds to prove, declaring that "as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive" (I Corinthians xv, 22). Glorious resurrection hope! Precious Bible! The one Book alone which teaches a resurrection of the dead, or that the dead are dead.

The Apostle proceeds to tell us that the dead will not all be resurrected together—at once—"but every man in his own order" (I. Corinthians xv, 23). The first order or rank will be the Church. Blessed and holy are all they that have part in the First Resurrection; "they shall be priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with Him a thousand years (Revelation xx, 6).

This work of raising the dead will be the work of the entire reign of Messiah, as explained in our context: Christ must reign until He shall have put all enemies under His feet—the last enemy will be death. As during the Mediatorial reign mankind shall rise up out of their ignorance, weakness, sin, depravity, they will be coming out of death conditions into life conditions; they will be in process of raising up—resurrection.

This does not prove, however, that all of Adam's race will receive the gift of God, eternal life, but it does prove that all will be blessed with the opportunity of attaining that glorious reward. Whoever, after having the release from death put within his grasp, shall decline eternal life on the Divine terms will die again, but not because of Adam's sin—it will not be the Adamic death. That Second Death will be complete destruction. Those sinners will die the Second Death without hope of further redemption or resurrection.

Troublesome Doubles.

Sir Hiram Maxim has been complaining that he has a double in America who is causing him much inconvenience, and this recalls other instances of well-known pairs bearing remarkable resemblance to each other.

The likeness between George Du Maurier and Sir Alma-Tadema was so close that a lady at dinner one night addressed Du Maurier as "Sir Alma," and further put her foot in it by assuring him that he really was not a bit like than man Du Maurier, as people tried to make out.

Other couple that might be mentioned as doubles were Lord Tennyson and Sir Leslie Stephen, and Jules Ferry, the French statesman, and Mr. William Whiteley, the "universal provider."

But most remarkable of all is the suggestion that Lord Darnley bore such a remarkable resemblance to Queen Elizabeth that he contrived to get her Majesty into his power, and ultimately personated her on the throne, shaving carefully every midnight to keep up the imposition.

The first cockatoo to be exhibited at the Crystal Palace, London, was found dead in its cage recently. It belonged to Mr. E. Gammon of Ripley, and had been in his family sixty-seven years.

Trial by Combat.

A law which was struck off the English statute book in 1819 allowed a man who appealed against sentence of death to fight with the nearest relation of the murdered person and thus make proof of his guilt or innocence.

Wealth of Croesus.

Croesus possessed in landed property a fortune equal to $6,000,000, besides a large sum of money, slaves and furniture.

Origin of a Salute.

Of military salutes, raising the right hand to the head is generally believed to have originated from the days of the tournament, when knights lifted past the throne of the queen of beauty and by way of compliment raised their hands to their brows to imply that her beauty was too dazzling for unshaded eyes to gaze upon.

Moscow's Climate.

In Moscow the winter cold is so intense that it freezes quicksilver, while the summer temperature is as high as that of Naples.

Freezing Water.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

IF A MAN DIE SHALL HE LIVE AGAIN?

Back of the happiness of the season at Easter lies the hope of the soul, the augmenting certainty with which man answers this question. It is one of the oldest of all questions. In the morning glow of time, by the fields of Egypt and the plains of Chaldea, men sought to solve the mystery. The Indian talked of hunting grounds, and the man of business in Chicago and London drops his papers on his desk and finds himself wondering whether sh will have any part or knowledge in the life that will go on when he is gone.

The search favours not at all of superstition. The advent of science has not served to make it any less pressing. The only difference is that men cease to be satisfied with superficial answers. At heart, the race beats as one here; it feels that immortality is its right; its whole theory of life is built on his; we live by the faith of an unending life.

The word Easter is almost synonymous with happiness, but happiest of all are those who have the Easter vision, which is the vision of a living Christ. Easter Day is the celebration of the resurrection of our Lord, "who liveth and was dead, and is alive for evermore. That is the old, yet ever new, the precious Easter truth, "a living Christ," to give new life through the hope of immortality. Where is the sting of death or the victory of the grave, with the expectation of a perfect world beyond?

Love is ever asking the question. Friends may die, but the friendship lives. We have said our farewells, but the longing for their faces does not dim. Fathers and mothers are cherishing the hope of a day yet to dawn when the old home ties will be knit again. Hearts that are heavy with the sorrow of a lost form and a silent voice will see the star of hope through the blurring of tears. We have written this hope in all the beauty of our cemeteries, in love's memorials. We accept it as our every day thoughts.

In some lives, those that have meant most for this world, there has been a steady consciousness of another world and a larger life—a sense of immortality. All the teachings of Jesus stand out with this background of a man's life as stretching far beyond the dust. And so, when the gloom of the grave gathered about him, those who knew him best saw in it but the promise of another day and soon they saw, as never before, how glorious and how real the fate of the life that cannot taste of death.

* * *

Easter is the symbol of life. To make room for the life more abundant, there must be a death of the life inefficient, a death of old desires, ambitions and aims which are unworthy. Each year should bring a fresh resurrection in our lives—a death of the old life, poor and mean, a resurrection to the new life, unselfish and hallowed. We must die to weakness to arise to strength. We must die to selfishness to arise to devotion. We must die to strife and hatred to arise to peace and love. We must die to the things which are temporal to arise to the things which are eternal. To all who have the clear Easter vision, Christ is risen indeed in the heart, to be alive for evermore.

* * *

EASTER FAITH

That which we cannot demonstrate as a scientific fact, we grasp by faith. With what scorn and loathing do we look on any who, lacking love ties to the future and barren of hope for larger life tell us that men die like the beasts! No. Faith has wrought the better hope into the very fibre of our basic thinking. We love best the songs that sing it and give immortality to the literature that speaks our hope most clearly.

Either the question must be answered in the affirmative or it must be that man is the great exception to the jaws of an orderly world, the one being whose life is but a maze of contradictions. Are his powers alone to fail of their possibilities? Is he the one flower whose glorious seeds shall find no fruitage. Why bears he these longings, why cherish dreams and hopes that can never be fulfilled in the brief span of his life? Shall he come into being freighted with these precious seeds of eternity, this consciousness and expectation of a larger life, and all fail of fruition?

Life mocks not thus the grass of the fields. How much more, then, shall your Heavenly Father care for you, O ye of little faith. To doubt the fullness of life yet to be is to doubt the promise written over all the Father's works. And the heart of man answers back to the voice of nature. The sobber the man the clearer and firmer his hope of life to be; the white souls, the leaders, the lord of them all in life and character, kept clear and undimmed that shining light.

Resolve to see the world on the sunny side, and you have almost won the battle of life at the outset.

* * *

Every wedded pair might be happy did they but bear each other's burdens and strive with half the zeal they sometimes exert to make each other miserable to contribute to each other's mutual happiness.

* * *

Let the rooms where the family live be cheerful and sunny. No lady would expect her house plants to send out full, brilliant blossoms unless she placed them at a window where the sunshine would invigorate them. No more should she expect her children to show fresh, rosy complexions, or to develop genial dispositions, unless the live in light, sunny, airy rooms.

OYSTER CROQUETTES

Fifty oysters, one cupful of milk, one cupful oyster liquor, four tablespoonfuls of flour, four tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley, half a tablespoonful of lemon juice and salt and red pepper to taste, and yolks of four eggs. Drain the oysters taking care to save the liquor. Wash the oysters well by allowing water to run over them. Strain the liquor. Put the oysters into a saucepan with some of the liquor. Stir over the fire for five minutes. Remove from the fire, drain well and chop the oysters fine. Heat the milk and the liquor. Blend the butter and flour together in a saucepan over the fire, add the milk and stir until smooth, then add the chopped oysters. Stir till it boils and thickens, add the yolks of the eggs and allow to cook just one minute longer. Take from the fire, add the lemon juice, parsley, the salt and red pepper. Mix well and put away to cool. When cold form into neat croquettes. Brush over with beaten egg, then roll in fine breadcrumbs and fry in plenty of smoking hot fat.

NUT PUDDING

Cream a quarter of a cup of butter and half a cup of sugar, and beat into this half a cup of chopped nuts. Beat the yolks of two eggs light and add to the mixture with half a cup of milk. Sift two cups of pastry flour with two tablespoonfuls of baking powder, and add it to the mixture, beating thoroughly. Then add the stiff whites and a little salt, and steam in greased cups for half an hour. Serve with a hard sauce, flavored with lemon extract.

SALT RISING BREAD

In the morning stir the following ingredients together: Two cupful of boiled milk, four tablespoonfuls of cornmeal, half a teaspoonful of soda, half a teaspoonful of salt and half a teaspoonful of sugar. This is called the starter. Keep sitting in a vessel of warm water all day until it ferments and becomes a mass of foamy stuff. Set away in a cool place or in the refrigerator. When wanted, take two cupfuls of warm water, a quarter level teaspoonful soda, a quarter level teaspoon of salt, four tablespoonfuls of the starter and flour to make a thick batter.

Beat well and keep it in a larger vessel of warm water until it rises to several times its bulk. Pour one cupful of boiling water into the middle of the pan of flour, let cool, add the rising and mix softer than yeast bread and kneading much less. Place in well buttered baking pans, allow to rise well and bake slowly for 45 minutes.

May Not Appeal.

Montreal, April 18.—The strong pronouncement of Bishop Farthing in Christ Church Cathedral Sunday night condemnatory of the dissolution of the Herbert marriage, on the ground that it had not been performed by a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, set a movement on foot in the city yesterday morning with a view to having the case carried on appeal, to the Privy Council.

Some difficulty was immediately encountered, however, in the fact that the judgment of the court annuling the marriage went by default, and, therefore there is no client available whose case could be carried to appeal.

The petitioner in the civil action was the husband, and it was stated yesterday at the office of his counsel, L. J. Lefebvre, who has himself left for a trip to Europe, that Mrs. Herbert was a consenting party to the separation. It was further stated that previously the marriage had been declared void by the application of the parties, and the subsequent court action was taken for a dissolution of the marriage civilly.

The lawyer who had interested himself in the case in the interests of an appeal to the Privy Council, stated yesterday that, with the facts as now reported, a different complexion was put upon the story, and it was hardly likely that an appeal would be attempted.

Inspector Fitzgerald Dead.

Halifax, April 18.—A despatch was received last evening by Mrs. John Fitzgerald of this city conveying to her the sad news of the death of her son Frank, who was inspector of the Northwest Mounted Police.

The despatch was from Mr. A. B. Perry, commissioner of the Mounted Police at Regina. Commissioner Perry states that Inspector Fitzgerald's death occurred last January, near Fort Macpherson, while making a patrol to Dawson, and that three other members of the party met death at the same time. The commissioner says that he will forward details when received, and that he extends his sincere sympathy, the force having lost one of its most valued officers.

Inspector Fitzgerald had been with the Northwest Mounted Police for about twenty years. He was the first man to make his way to Dawson over the trail on which he met his death.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, April 17.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 45 carloads, consisting of 854 cattle, 506 hogs, 567 sheep and lambs and 169 calves.

Exporters.

Maybee & Wilson bought on order 19 exporters for the London market, at $5.85 to $6.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots of butchers sold at $5.65 to $5.90; loads of good, $5.50 to $5.75; medium, $5.20 to $5.45; common, $4.90 to $5.10; cows, $3.50 to $5.15; bulls, $4.25 to $5.00.

Milkers and Springers.

Only a few milkers and springers were on sale, and prices ranged at from $60 to $80 each.

Veal Calves.

Veal calves sold on an average of about $5 per cwt., or a range of $4 to $6 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts of sheep and lambs were reported to be 567, the bulk of which were American yearling shorn lambs, and, as receipts were greater than the demand, prices declined fully 50c per cwt. Sheep, ewes, $4.50 to $5; rams, $4 to $4.50; yearling lambs, $6 to $6.75 per cwt.; spring lambs, $3 to $7 each.

Hogs.

Prices for hogs were reported unchanged, at $6.60 for selects, fed and watered at the market, and $6.35 f.o.b. cars, but one buyer informed us that he could not get any at that price last week, and could not get any at that price to-day, and stated that all thru the country the drovers were paying he farmers $6.15.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, April 17.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending April 15 were 1160 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 2225 calves. The offerings this morning were 600 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 600 hogs and 200 calves.

A weaker feeling developed in the market for cattle this morning and prices declined ½c per lb., which was due to the fact that the run was somewhat larger than expected for the first market after Easter and as butchers in most cases had ample supplies on hand for this week the demand was very limited and consequently, even at the above reduction noted, the trade was slow. Choice steers sold at 6¼c, good at 5¾c to 6c, fairly good, at 5½c to 5¾c, fair at 4¾c to 5c, and common, at 4½c to 4¾c per lb. A few very choice cows brought 5½c and the lower grades sold from that down to 3½c per lb.

There was no change in the condition of the market for hogs, as compared with last Wednesday, but prices are 25c to 50c per cwt. lower than a week ago. The supply to-day was small, but as the demand was also limited there was ample to fill all requirements and sales of selected lots were made at $6.75 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

The trade in small meats was dull on account of the light demand and the very small offerings. A few choice calves sold at $20 each and the commoner veals from that sum down to $3. Old sheep brought from $5 to $60, and spring lambs, from $3 to $9 each, as to quality.

New York Live Stock.

NEW YORK, April 17.—Beeves—Receipts, 2600; steers steady to 10c higher; bulls and cows steady; all sold; steers, $4.75 to $6.35; bulls, $4.25 to $5.75; cows, $3 to $5.25.

British Cattle Markets.

LIVERPOOL, April 17.—John Rogers & Co., Liverpool, cable that there was a very slow trade at Birkenhead to-day, the demand being very poor, and Saturday's quotations for cattle were maintained with difficulty. States and Canadians, 12½c to 13c per lb.; clipped States lambs, made 14½c; wethers, 13c to 13½c, and wooled wethers, 13½c to 14c, dressed offal.

LISTEN TO US

"We are only little ones, but we know Zam-Buk eased our pain and cured our sores. Perhaps it would cure you, too, if you tried it?"

Isn't this sound advice from "babes and sucklings?" Take it! The speakers are the children of Mrs. L. Webster, of Seymour St., Montreal, and the mother adds weight to their appeal. She says: "My little girl contracted scalp disease at school. Bad gatherings formed all over her head, and not only caused the child acute pain but made her very ill. The sores discharged, and occurring on the scalp we feared she would lose all her hair. She was in a pitiable plight when we tried Zam-Buk, but a few days' treatment with this balm gave her ease. Then the sores began to heal, and we continued the Zam-Buk treatment. In a short time she was quite healed.

"My little boy sustained a serious scald on the neck. It set up a bad sore, and quite a few things we tried failed to heal it or give him ease. Once more we turned to Zam-Buk, and we were not disappointed. It acted like a charm in drawing away the pain, and soon healed the wound."

Zam-Buk is "something different" in the way of balms. It contains powerful healing herbal essences, which, as soon as applied to skin diseases, kill off the germs and end the painful smarting. Other essences contained there so stimulate the cells that new healthy tissue is speedily formed. Eczema, itch, ulcers, cold sores, abscesses, festering sores, blood poisoning, chronic wounds, cold cracks, etc., are healed and cured in this way. Use it for all skin injuries and diseases. It is also of great service for piles. All druggists and stores at 50 cents box, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

BODIES OF THE ILL FATED MOUNTED POLICE PARTY HAVE BEEN BROUGHT IN Later Details Show That Inspector Fitzgerald, Well Known in the East, and His Party Starved to Death on Banks of Peace River After Eating Their Dogs--Outfit Slipped Into the River and Could Not Be Recovered.

Special to the Examiner.

DAWSON, YUKON, APRIL 18. — The bodies of Inspector Fitzgerald and Constables Carter, Kiney and Taylor, who perished on the terrible Dawson trial, have been brought into Ft. McPherson. Later details indicate that the unfortunate party lost their supplies and practically starved or froze on the banks of the Peace River after they had eaten their dogs. They left on Dec. 22 from Ft. McPherson, intending to make Dawson, but evidently part of their train slipped into the river. Fitzgerald was in Toronto and other Ontario cities last fall recruiting for the force. He had a long and brilliant career in the police force and served with distinction in South Africa.

In addition to the loss of Fitzgerald's ill-fated party, Colonel White, Comptroller of the Northwest Mounted Police, officially announces the death at Herschel Island, in January, from exposure, of Sergeant Selig.

PETERBOROUGH MAN SHOOTS HIMSELF IN EDMONTON

EDMONTON, APRIL 13.—Unable to swallow because of a cut tonsil, and finding sleep impossible because of pains in his throat, Reginald N. Hendren of Peterborough, Ont., who came here with two brothers a few days ago, walked into the Twin City baggage and express company's office here this morning and securing a revolver from a trunk he had there, shot himself in the right temple death resulting immediately. Hendren left a letter directed to the police asking that his body be turned over to Anderson's undertaking rooms and that his remains be embalmed and sent to his home in Peterborough The letter also gave as the reason for suicide, the fact that inosilitis kept him from eating. Six trunks for the deceased and his brothers George and Fred, are now at the Twin City express awaiting claimants. They arrived in the city April 10, and from indications were evidently bent on homesteading.

THE MEXICAN ASPECT IS MORE PEACEABLE THIS MORNING

Examiner Special:

WASHINGTON, APRIL 18. — The news of the invasion of Aqui Prita by the insurrectos and the occupation of the place by Diaz's troops at daylight this morning affords some relief to the apprehension regarding the situation in Mexico. Pres. Taft received bulletins all night regarding the progress of operations near Douglas on the U. S. border and this morning early was in conference with the secretary of war and foreign affairs. It was expected Taft would send an extraordinary message to Congress today, but this afternoon things are assuming a more peaceable aspect.

COMPANY APPRECIATES FINE WORK OF FIRE BRIGADE

Peterborough, April 18.

Dear Sir,—Permit us through your columns to express our appreciation of the prompt and business-like manner in which the fire in our gas plant during last night was dealt with.

Before being discovered the fire had made rapid headway and gave every promise of being not only costly but dangerous in view of the highly inflammable material and large volume of gas stored on the property.

The skill and experience displayed in coping with the emergency and the energy with which orders were executed reflect great credit on Chief Howard and his men.

BAD FIRE AT GAS WORKS LAST NIGHT SPLENDIDLY HANDLED BY THE BRIGADE

Firemen Had a Hard Fight Against Blaze in Which Two Men Were Rendered Unconscious By Gas, a Third Badly Hurt by a Hose Nozzle and a Fourth Had Hand Cut, but Their Efforts Were Successful---Ten Thousand Feet of Gas Lost---Gasometer Was Badly Damaged.

A disastrous fire occurred last night at the Gas Works on Simcoe street, entailing a loss of about $1,500 on the building and about 10,000 feet of gas. The alarm was sent in by telephone about 11.30 p.m., and by the time the firemen arirved the blaze had assumed alarming proportions.

Under the direction of Chief Howard, five lines of hose were laid and as many streams were soon playing on the burning building. After about two hours of strenuous work on the part of the firemen the fire was get under control, but it was found necessary to keep a detachment of men and two lines of hose on the scene of the conflagration during the rest of the night ,as occasional pits of flame would burst out here and there throughout the buildings, a significant warning as to what might happen should the vigilant watch of the firemen be relaxed.

Just what caused the fire is not definitely known. It was first discovered by night watchman Todd, who immediately took means to notify the Fire Dept. Meanwhile some one discovered the blaze from Hunter street and rang the alarm from Box 24.

As an evidence of the dangers attendant upon fighting a fire of this nature, two of the firemen were overcome by the fumes, and were carried out of the burning building in an unconscious condition, while another man was seriously injured about the face, having been struck by the force of the water coming from one of the nozzles.

This is the first time that Chief Howard has had a favourable opportunity of making a thorough test of the new high pressure waterworks system, and to use the Chief's own words, "It was all that could be desired."

There was no difficulty in keeping the spectators out of the danger zone, as not a few of them were well aware of the fact that in the burning building was stored a huge gas holder. The danger from explosion, then, was one worthy of consideration. About 10,000 feet of gas was lost and it is estimated that by the time the repairs have been made to the gas holder, the loss will exceed 50,000 sfeet, as the holder itself was badly damaged.

MURDER CASE IS PRINCIPAL FEATURE OF THE ASSIZES WHICH OPENED THIS AFTERNOON

"Case Involves Shocking and Disgusting Details" Remarked Mr. Justice Teetzel in Explaining the Charge to the Grand Jury---Not Likely That the Taking of Evidence Will be Commenced Before To-morrow Morning.

Hugh Deline, of Belmont township will be tried for the murder of his wife at the Spring Assizes of the High Court of Justice, which opened at the Court House this afternoon, with Mr. Justice Teetzel presiding. The docket is very light, there being only the one criminal charge, while the civil list consists of but one case, that of Quigley against the Union Bank of Canada.

Among the lawyers present when the court opened were Mr. E. Meredith, K.C., of London, who is acting as Crown prosecutor, R. E. Wood, County Crown Attorney, L. M. Hayes, G. H. Watson, K.C., G. N. Gordon, E. L. Goodwill, I. L. Helmuth of Toronto, J. H. Bradburn, John Green.

Thos. Webster was elected foreman of the Grand Jury, which consists of Frank Elmhurst, David Fleming, Wm. Galbraith, John E. Hayes, Adam Humphries, Robt. G. Kingan, Robt. McCutcheon, Thomas Webster, Robt. Scott, John Kylie, John Hickey, Geo. Ward.

Mr. Justice Teetzel, in addressing the Grand Jury on the Deline case, explained that their duties would include one serious charge, in which a person was indicted for the crime of murder. The case was one which would involve their inquiring into a large amount of circumstantial evidence. They were not to try the case as a petit jury, but simply investigate the evidence submitted. It was not for them to determine whether or not the prisoner was guilty, but to decide whether or not there was enough evidence to warrant the prisoner being put on trial.

"The case involves shocking and disgusting details," remarked His Lordship. "It is charged that the prisoner by his actions, conduct and treatment of his wife caused her death. A large part of the evidence will be medical testimony. The prisoner and his wife, I gather from the evidence placed before me, were living in a township in this County, apparently in a very low grade of society. The evidence will show that the wife was found in a practically nude condition, dead and with serious marks of violence upon her and that upon the post-mortem the medical experts say that death was due to violence inflicted by some one. There will be evidence in regard to the conduct of the prisoner before and after the deceased's death, which the crown will say indicate that the prisoner was the only person that could have committed these acts. Among other injuries, it was discovered that this woman had sustained a serious internal injury, and it is said had been a victim of the crime known as sodomy, in the committing of which other acts of violence were committed."

His Lordship explained to the jury the definition of murder as laid down in the Code. The first definition involved the point of intention on the part of the person charged; the second was to the effect that if a person meant to cause another serious bodily injury, knowing that it is likely to cause death and is reckless as to whether it does or not, he shall also be charged with murder. In the present case he gathered from the evidence that the prisoner would be prosecuted under the second definition. The Crown would endeavour to show that by his brutal treatment and acts of violence, although knowing them likely to cause death, the prisoner was responsible for the death of his wife, as he was reckless whether or not such a result ensued. The circumstances that would be placed before them would indicate that the prisoner did not mean to kill his wife by his brutality, but that he was reckless whether death ensued or not.

The Grand Jury then retired to investigate the case. In the event of a True Bill being returned, the hearing of the evidence will likely commence to-morrow morning.

The non-jury civil action of Quigley vs. the Union Bank of Canada is being proceeded with this afternoon.

SYMPATHY WITH MR. GRAHAM.

The Examiner offers its most cordial sympathy to Hon. G. P. Graham in his great bereavement by the death of his son, P. M. Graham, who died after a ten days' illness at the home of his father in Brockville. De ceased was a member of the editorial staff of the Recorder and its representative in the Press Gallery, Ottawa, and was very popular among his press associates and in his home town, where he had passed the most o this life of twenty-six years. The whole town mourns with Mr. Graham, and the whole domain of public life in which he is so prominent a figure, will join in sympathy with him in the loss of a son with so great promise of distinction, who as a citizen of Brockville possessed very large claims to the universal respect and esteem in which he was held.

NO GROUND FOR OPPOSITION.

It is reported that the Canadian Manufacurers' Association has abandoned the fight which they put up with so much energy against the reciprocity agreement when it was first announced, and when they did not know so much about it as they do now. The report to this effect is very likely true, for the Manufacturers' Association has nothing to fight about. The reciprocity agreement makes no changes in the tariff affecting manufactured products to alarm any industrial interest. As a class the manufacturers are very lightly touched by the agreement, and the manufacturing interests have the assurance of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that they will not be injured by any tariff changes —, expressed in these words. "We have not hurt the manufacturer and we shall not do so." Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister, has given a similar assurance, so the manufacturing interests see that they have nothing to fear, and that further antagonism to a pact that will benefit the farmers, will provoke their hostility and lead to reprisals in the form of a demand for lowered protective duties. If the farmers can't get the benefit of a larger and more constant market, they must have something, and that something would be cheaper manufactured goods by the reduction or removal of duty.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

The article reprinted on page ten of this issue is an address in part, delivered before the Lindsay Horticultural Society. It should be read with care and interest, for it gives valuable information in regard to the work other Horticultural Societies are doing throughout the province. It should be an inspiration and encouragement to the society in Peterborough, and should, besides, be read by all who have an interest in the beauty and credit of Peterborough. It demonstrates the advantages to be gained by the increase of membership. One of these advantages is tangible and material—the government grant is largely gauged by membership. In 1909 the Peterborough Society received a grant of $104. St. Catharines, with about two thousand less population, got a grant in the same year of $913, nearly ten times greater, a fact in large part explained by a membership for St. Catharines of 645, since increased to 1,000, or more. Peterborough should set its face towards the 1,000 mark this year, with aims at a still higher figure in the future. Not only will the Society gain by the increased grant, but the whole city will gain by the more widely diffused interest in city beautification and the tangible results arising from more extended co-operation.

The local Society is offering excellent inducements, in the form of special premiums of plants suitable for bedding, or for window boxes, or for those who prefer them, house plants. These premiums, if purchased at the ordinary retail rates, should cost far more than the amount of the membership fee.

The public is urged to join heartily in the campaign for the making of Peterborough beautiful. The city, as has often been remarked by citizens, as well as visitors, is naturally excellently adapted to beautification. Besides, it has splendid provided advantages in the way of the finest and most generally distributed stand of street shade trees of any city in Canada. We have many naturally beautiful parks, which can be made, as the majority of them are, models of their kind. But there is one disgraceful exception, and that is Central Park, which has the forlorn and neglected appearance of a step-mothered child. Something should be done to bring it into line with the other parks, and this cannot be done till it is brought under one jurisdiction and administration. We have the military, the Collegiate Institute and the Horticultural Society each having its little corner of the park to look after. It follows that there is no unity of design or policy, no co-operation. Physically, the park is one, otherwise it is divided in jurisdiction and treatment, or rather neglect, in varying stages. The park must be brought under the authority of one body or other, and till this is done there will be the same results that stare us in the face every day in the most disgracefully neglected spot in the city, and placed in the most public part of the city. The Horticultural Society is the natural custodian of the park, and if it had authority and were provided with means to carry out a reasonable policy of beautifying the park, we should be proud and not ashamed, of Central Park. Or if the park is not intrusted to the care of the Society it should be placed under some one jurisdiction, with authority to deal with it in the way a park should be treated, by unity of policy and design and singleness of administration.

One way to effect improvement in this regard is to enlarge the membership and, consequently, the influence of the Society. One thousand energetic members uniting in impressing their views upon the authorities would tend to move them to the necessary action in regard to Central Park, and would, in addition, be an influence that would affect, and effect, the beauty of every part of the city.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Women will never become private detectives; they wouldn't consent to wear plain clothes.

New alarm for the jingoes—the United States is becoming altogether too friendly to Canada and Great Britain. A party of Toronto teachers went to Atlantic City. The officials who showed the pretty "school marms" through the Pennsylvania railway station wore Union Jacks. Why wasn't Col. Denison there?

Hon. Mr. Fielding stated in his recent budget speech, says the Brantford Expositor, that henceforth it would be a policy of the Dominion government to pay out of current revenue all those expenses hitherto charged under capital account—with the exception of large and costly national public works such as the Transcontinental Railway, and the Georgian Bay ship canal. The change suggested will tend, if made, to greatly simplify the bookkeeping of the Dominion and the form of publishing the financial statements of the country. In other words, it will be impossible to do, as Provincial Treasurer Matheson is said to have done, namely, charge sufficient expenditures to capital account that ought to have been paid out of revenue, to present an apparent surplus.

THE BRITISH BUDGET'S SUCCESS.

(London Advertiser)

The British Treasury has closed its books for the fiscal year, which ended March 31. It was the first year of the unimpeded operation of the Lloyd-George budget. The receipts were £203,850,588, or £4,050,588 more than estimated by Mr. Lloyd-George. The gross expenditure was £186,943,667, leaving a surplus of £5,806,921, or nearly $30,000,000.

Of the year's revenue, £31,346,000 represented arrears from the previous year, when the rejection of the budget by the House of Lords led to the non-collection of much of the income tax. The ordinary normal revenue for 1910-11 was therefore £172,504,588. The normal expenditure in the same period was £171,955,667, the remainder representing payments deferred from the previous year.

For the current year, beginning April 1, the Chancellor will have to provide for £180,000,000, or about £7,500,000 more than the normal receipts of the past year. Will the revenue on the existing basis of taxation expand sufficiently to meet that increase? Last year, without imposing a single new tax, he budgeted for an increase of £8,000,000 in the revenue, and he received more even than the budget estimate. With trade still booming from month to month, the probability is that the Chancellor will feel justified in estimating boldly for the coming year. Customs excise and income tax promise well. The new land taxes are coming in, and are expected to yield a progressive increase. The Chancellor and his budget have so far been triumphantly vindicated by results, and there is little doubt that they go forword to fresh successes.

Considerations As To Control Of Tuberculosis In Horned Animals

The issue of the report of the International Commission on the "Control of Bovine Tuberculosis," (or "consumption"), is of significant interest at the present time, particularly in view of the active public demand for some definite and authoritative pronouncement in consideration of the whole situation, as regards Bovine Tuberculosis, in its relation to the welfare of the live stock industry and to its influence on public health. The economic importance of the subject has occasioned a very great deal of discussion in scientific and agricultural circles, and has led to the adoption by various legislative and municipal bodies of measures for the suppression and eradication of this great scourge of domesticated animals and for the protection of the people against infection through the consumption of diseased meat or polluted milk. It has long been felt, however, that for the North American continent a really efficient and satisfactory programme could only be arranged and undertaken with any prospect of uniform and permanent success through concerted action on the part of the governments of both the United States and Canada, and only also when the legislation enacted, or policy adopted, was in substantial agreement with the expressed views of representative authorities of both countries.

The report referred to embodies the deliberate conclusions of just such an official and representative delegation and both farmers and the public generally are to be congratulated in having now placed before them in most concise and readable form a statement containing an epitome of the researches of the Commission, and of the recommendations which it has at length determined to make. The decisions which have been reached are eminently conservative in their nature, and for this reason, if for no other, they will exercise a much stronger appeal than would otherwise be possible, particularly in the case of those who may for any reason be prejudiced against legislative interference. The prevalence of the disease and the consequent loss to the breeders, as well as the now acknowledged danger to public health are not minimized, but gravely acknowledged and seriously considered.

In the recommendations which have been made, however, due regard has been given to the great practical difficulties, which must, of necessity, be encountered in the conscientious carrying out of any policy likely to be of use in combating the malady.

Compulsory slaughter of infected animals is not advocated, though the destruction of those showing clinical symptoms of the disease is advised. Compulsory testing even is not insisted on, except in herds where the disease is known to exist, though the usefulness of tuberculin, as a reliable diagnostic agent, when properly administered, is confidently affirmed. The Commission bases its great hope of ultimate success in accomplishing the intention of whatever legislation may be enacted on the co-operation of the breeders of live stock in the policy of rearing healthy herds by protecting the young from contagion of any sort. A sufficient explanation is given of the methods advocated, and in order to safeguard the interests of those now possessing clean herds and of those making an honest effort to establish such herds, precautionary measures are recommended regarding the shipment, sale, and interchange of stock. The policy, as presented, is in every way reasonable and cannot but commend itself to any fair-thinking man.

It is unnecessary to enter into a further discussion of the details of the report of the Commission, as a copy may be easily obtained by any reader. The fact that this report is likely to form the basis of a new policy shortly to be adopted by the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa should give its contents a special interest for Canadian owners of cattle and swine. The time is evidently ripe for such a departure, and the Minister's hands will, no doubt, be strengthened by the steadily growing sentiment on the part of the public in favour of such action. In the meantime and until a definite policy is announced, a careful study of this publication should be made by every farmer and breeder in the country. Whether or not it may be to his advantage to lay his plans forthwith, in accordance with the proposed scheme as therein outlined, will remain for him to decide, but the information which the report contains is of immediate practical value and should not be neglected. It may be obtained by addressing the Veterinary Director General, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, Ont.

FRIGHTENING THE FARMER.

(Toronto Star)

Conservatives who have been telling the Canadian farmer that he cannot compete with his fellow agriculturists across the border are either insincere or ill-informed. It is not improbable that if the reciprocity agreement were out of politics, and were being considered in the broadest national spirit, these men would at once concede the ability of Dominion farms and Dominion farmers to hold their own in a market which lies right at their doors. Tillers of the soil in this country are themselves delighted with the prospect of a new market of 92,000,000 people, and are not deceived by an ill-judged appeal to a sense of inferiority which they do not possess. Some of them who have watched the course of the Ottawa Opposition are doubtless amused by the shifting winds which have blown that storm-tossed vessel hither and thither. They have seen the opponents of reciprocity take the attitude that the agreement is all right as a bargain, but that there was no occasion for making it. When this proved unpopular, refuge was taken in the cry that if we sold the United States more hay and purchased more of their early vegetables, annexation would surely follow. Canadians did not like to be told that their loyalty was situated in their pockets, and this argument was also abandoned. Thereafter the Opposition had recourse to the plea that reciprocity would injure the manufacturers. It was shown that the tariff agreement is practically limited to natural products, and another line of opposition had to be sought. Many a farmer smiled when he read the latest contention, an appeal to save him from United States competition.

The estimate of Canadian agriculturists which is feigned by the Conservatives at Ottawa is not shared by the farmers across the border. This, for instance, is what J. M. Devine tells the American agriculturist:

"Pass this great reciprocity pact, and Canada, within twenty years, under the law of growth, can produce all the wheat that the American can consume, and she will do it. And her flax and barley and oats and stock and butter and eggs will follow in exact proportion."

"When we realize," says J. D. Bacon, another United States opponent of the pact, "that the country to the north of us can raise more grain to the acre, at less cost per acre for raising it, than we can, I think there is no kind of agreement that can be made with Canada that will be a fair trade for the farmers on this side of the line." P. V. Collins, editor of the Northwestern Agriculturist of Minneapolis, declared that "if this reciprocity treaty goes through, the time will soon come when our farmers will be reduced to the ranks of renters, peons, or peasants."

The attempt to convince Canadian farmers that their neighbours in the States are competitors who will swamp them will not succeed in the light of such utterances as the foregoing. Most of them will be inclined to resent the Opposition attitude of patronizing solicitude for their "fate" in an open market.

PROOF THAT PROVES

If one person more than another should know the value of medicine, it is the retail druggist.

Therefore when ten thousand retail druggists of the United States recommend Vinol, the delicious cod liver and iron tonic, without oil, as the best strengthening tonic known, and are willing to return their customer's money in every case where it fails to give satisfaction, there can be no room for doubt.

Among others, one of the most reliable druggists of Lynn, Mass., Mr. Warren Toppan, says, "From personal experience I know what Vinol will do. I had a chronic cold all winter, and was so weak I could hardly get about. Nothing seemed to help me until I tried Vinol—the change was magic—and what surprised me most, Vinol not only cured the cold but built me up and cured me of a severe stomach trouble that had bothered me for twenty years. Vinol is certainly a wonderful medicine." (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

We ask every run-down, nervous, debilitated, aged or weak person or any person suffering from chronic coughs and colds to try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that their money will be returned if it does not do all we claim. CHEMONG BRIDGE IS DAMAGED BY ICE

BRIDGENORTH, APRIL 17.—The ice on Chemong Lake is still lying there as yet, but on Saturday it moved about 12 feet and made a break in the bridge which will delay traffic until the ice goes out. With fine weather it would be only a few days.

The crows, robins and sea gulls have all put in their appearance and the usual moving about that occurs every spring is still going on in the village.

The Bridgenorth Court, No. 315, C. O.F. intends holding its anniversary on April the 26th. A good time is expected, as some splendid talent has been engaged.

Miss Allie Telford is home for a few days from the Nicholls Hospital taking a rest after a busy time in the hospital this winter.

Mr. Charles White has moved his dwelling house and enlarged it, which adds to the appearance of the village.

Rev. Mr. Crookshanks has just finished a three weeks' revival service. Doubtless good results will follow.

Mr. Gladstone Telford is home with his parents as he has been granted leave of absence owing to ill health.

Mr. Jobe, our popular councillor, is busy making his plans for the repairing of the roads during the coming summer, and is opening up some new streets in the park, which are required.

Mr. R. Heard has been engaged by the council of Smith, to run the grader for the coming summer.

Miss Martin, the local school teacher, is away on her Easter holidays.

ELLIOT'S

WATCH FOR OUR SUMMER OPENING ABOUT MAY 10th

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I HEARD something the other day which made me fairly sick at heart with horror and disgust. A certain married man—I hate to give him that name, but must for purposes of convenience — is going a bout telling his men friends and generally circulating the story that a young girl, with whom he has been seema good deal of late, is perpetually ch asing him up and begging him to take her to dinner, walk to the train with her, etc.

This is the girl's side of the story, which of course has not received any such general circulation.

The man has told her how unhappy he is at home, that he is not understood, that she is one of the rare creatures who can understand him, that it is not just because he made the mistake of marrying a woman not suited to him that he should be entirely denied the stimulus and inspiration of her society, that there is no possible harm in her going to dinner with him at a reputable restaurant occasionally or letting him walk to the station with her, and that people who would talk about her are evil minded and not worth noticing. The girl is at heart a nice little girl, who wants to do what is right and has no real idea of the desolate wilderness into which the primrose path she is treading may lead her.

Of course, she knows in a general way that it is something of which mother would not approve, but mother is so old-fashioned she justifies herself that you can't always tell by what she thinks. And then she has been so lonesome and worked so hard, and had so little fun since she came to the city, and he is the first man who has been especially kind to her, and the diversion of his friendship and kindly attentions, the delight of having something to look forward to from day to day, has gradually become very important to her. The wrong is partly glossed over by his specious arguments and partly by her feelings that she is really of use to him. And for the rest — well, lonesomeness and overwork are not very good as stimulators of the moral sense.

That she hasn't the vaguest notion of the abominable and utterly unfounded story he is circulating about her goes without saying.

Poor, foolish little girl!

How I wish that you and all your poor foolish little sisters who trust men like this one so blindly might see your true positions for a moment! Ithink it would mean some pretty sharp, short stops for you and some pretty hard croppers for some of the cads if you could.

Of course, you each think that the particular man who is being a platonic friend with you is really and truly to be trusted and holds your honour as dearly as his own.

Listen, girls. Why should this man, who is betraying his wife, the mother of his children, the woman he has every reason to love and honour—and in your heart of hearts you must acknowledge that if you were that wife you would certainly resent and regard as a betrayal the way he talks and acts to you—why should he be any more faithful and honourable in his treatment of you?

No, you don't think your particular man would be capable of saying that you were running after him.

Perhaps not.

And yet, again, there is the chance that he is saying that or something worse.

Is it a chance that you care to take?

Ruth Cameron

Little Girl—(tactlessly)—"Mother, do look at that extraordinary lady!" (Notices mother's look of horror) "Sorry, mother; I forgot I oughtn't to point.

NEARLY DIED OF STONE IN THE BLADDER

GIN PILLS SAVED HIM

513 James St., Hamilton, Ont.

"Five years ago, I was taken down with what the doctors called Inflammation of The Bladder—intense pains in back and loins, and difficulty in urinating, and the attacks, which became more frequent, amounted to unbearable agony. I became so weak that I could not walk across the floor.

My wife read in the papers about GIN PILLS and sent for a box. From the very first, I felt that GIN PILLS were doing me good. The pain was relieved at once and the attacks were less frequent.

In six weeks, the Stone in the Bladder came away. When I tell how I suffered and how now I am healthy and able to work, I cannot express myself strongly enough when I speak of what GIN PILLS have done for me." John Herman, 45

GIN PILLS are sold at 50c a box—6 for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your dealer does not handle them. Sample box free if you write us, mentioning this paper. Money back if GIN PILLS do not give full satisfaction. National Drug and Chemical Co., Dept. B., Toronto.

OLD PETERBORO' BALL PLAYER IS IN THE CITY

Sid Haliburton, whom Peterborough all fans will remember, having played third base for the Peterborough Midland League team in 1907, the year the locals were beaten out for the championship by Port Hope in a sudden death game at Cobourg is in the city representing a Toronto firm which is making some alterations and repairs at the Normal school. He has many friends and acquaintances here who will be glad to welcome him back to Peterborough, where he will be stationed for the next couple of weeks. He expects to play with the Evangelias of the Don Valley League this season, although he has not definitely decided.

THE ANNUAL WALKING RACE

The Brantford Expositor will hold its annual walking race between Brantford and Paris over a fifteen-mile course on May 20th again this year, and the event promises to be a bigger success than last year, when there were forty starters. This year the race will be open to amateur walkers of Canada, having been confined last year to the adjacent four counties. An array of valuable trophies and bronze medals will be put up for the winners of the race, which will be conducted under C. A. A. U. sanction. The race will offer a good opportunity to the increasing number of good walkers throughout the country, who are anxious to show their mettle. Entry blanks can be secured from H. L. TEAMS FOR FACTORY LEAGUE

It looks as if Tommie Darke's proposed Factory League was just what the employees of the different concerns were looking for and no difficulty should be experienced in securing enough teams to make a compact workable league, which will provide lots of baseball during the season. Last night the Canadian General Electric Tool Room and Machine Shop both signified their intention of placing teams in the League and it is said that the Lock Works, Auburn Woollen Mills and other institutions will follow suit. Teams should communicate with T. Darke at the Brinton Carpet Works.

ENJOYABLE EVENING

A most enjoyable evening was spent at St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last night when an 'At Home' was held under the auspices of the Pleasure Club. Progressive euchre was played and refreshments were served. Dancing was also indulged in. The winner of the progressive euchre prize for the ladies was Miss LaGraunder, and for the gentlemen, Mr. Louis LeBarre. A large number were present, and all spent a most delightful time.

SUCCESSFUL HOTEL

The regular meeting of the Newmarket Hotel Company was held at the King George Hotel on Friday evening, March 10th, when the various accounts for the previous month were ordered to be paid. Notwithstanding the heavy expense for heating and lighting, the business showed quite a handsome profit for the short month of February. The directors of the company found it necessary to make provision for an independent supply of ice, and have built an ice house and put in over 600 blocks of the beautiful spring water ice from Borgarttown. It will afford the public much pleasure to know that Mr. and Mrs Brown, who have conducted the management of the hotel so successfully, and have made so many friends for Local Option, have been engaged for another year.—Newmarket Era.

A BIG SUCCESS

The "at home" last night in the Conservatory of Music Hall, under the auspices of the West End Athletic Club, was one of the most enjoyable and successful events of the season and was very largely attended. Every arrangement had been made for the comfort and entertainment of the guests, and the result was a thoroughly delightful evening. The music was furnished by Mr. Strathy of Toronto, in his usual efficient manner. The committee in charge were Messrs. N. W. Laing, C. A. Henry, H. M. Callaghan, E. W. Pratt, T. J. Reilley and F. V. Haskill, and are to be congratulated upon the result of their efforts. The patronesses were Mrs. C. C. Graham, Mrs. E. V. Morphet, Mrs. F. McGrath, Mrs. F. Hughes, Mrs. G. H. Giroux and Mrs. J. V. Gallivan.

THE FARM AND CROP CONDITIONS IN ONTARIO

From Farm and Dairy.

Mr. T. G. Raynor of the Seed Division, Ottawa, who in recent weeks has been well over Ontario, called on the editors of Farm and Dairy on Saturday, April 8 and gave us the benefit of his observations in the following points in regard to crops and farm conditions generally.

The fall wheat is much injured, the hard freezing weather of a week ago having made the outcome of the wheat crop exceptionally doubtful. Farmers state that where fall wheat had a good top, it will come through all right but where there is not much top there is little hope for it.

CONTRAST IN WEATHER CONDITIONS

The marked contrast between weather conditions in the southwestern part of Ontario and the more northern and easterly sections was evidenced when Mr. Raynor told of the farmers three weeks ago in Essex county, having been at their plowing. Even yet in other parts of the province there is plenty of snow and ice in the roads, fence corners and protected places.

The maple syrup yield has been extraordinarily light as yet. In western Ontario the principal early run was secured about the middle of March. The freeze-up of a couple of weeks ago closed operations and there has been but very little sap since. In many parts of eastern Ontario the farmers have not yet tapped.

PLENTY OF FODDER

The live stock throughout the country looks well. It has come through the winter in good shape there seems to be plenty of fodder in the country. Horses are very high in price and are in great demand and sell readily at fancy prices.

In regard to the seed trade much of what Mr. Raynor had to say is placed before Farm and Dairy readers also where in this issue. Mr. Raynor reports a great deal of home-grown clover all over the province and in Eastern Ontario. Some farmers last year met with splendid success and obtained abnormal yields, even though they threshed the seed with the ordinary grain separator. Some eastern Ontario farmers claim to have gotten eight bushels of clover seed to the acre.

RED CLOVER SEED TRADE

Local dealers are not stocking up heavily with red clover. They claim that there is much seed in the hands of the farmers who are selling it to one another. This state of affairs would seem to be of advantage to farmers, but to those acquainted with actual conditions it is apparent that it will be the cause of much low-grade seed being sown this year, which will not lessen the buckhorn, ragweed and other similar weed evils.

Timothy is exceptionally high in price and farmers are buying but little of it. This is in all probability just as well, since farmers will instead grow clover, which will be better for the land and indirectly better for their incomes.

ABOUT ALFALFA

From Farm and Dairy.

I have five acres of light, corn land that I am thinking of sowing to alfalfa. Have taken off a crop of fall rye followed by buckwheat with a heavy coating of stable manure for the corn crop last season. Would land so treated give a good crop of alfalfa? Would it be of any advantage to have a sample of this land analyzed?—J. B., Durham Co., Ont.

Land such as described that is light in character and dry is good soil for alfalfa. The main requisite for alfalfa is that the roots have dry feet. If your soil was fertile enough to grow a good crop of corn last year it will probably be fertile enough to seed down to alfalfa. If you have the manure a light application applied with the manure spreader would be valuable this spring in giving the crop a good start.

Soil analyses are of doubtful value in cases where the land has previously produced good crops. Were soil absolutely impoverished of any one of the fertilizing ingredients, soil analysis would detect this. Many impoverished soils, however, have plenty of all the fertilizing ingredients only they are not in an available form and so far our chemists have not found any reliable method of distinguishing by chemical analysis between available and non-available plant food. The best method of determining what fertilizers are most needed is by experimenting with small plots of fertilizers in various mixtures.

Splendid Lecture on "Florence The Beautiful"

Mr. H. R. H. Kenner Delighted Gathering at St. James' Church Last Evening With His Descriptions of Famous City.

EVENT WAS A TREAT

The lecture on "Florence, the Beautiful" at St. James' church last night by Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, was a brilliant success; inasmuch as it was immensely enjoyed by the fairly large gathering of people, which attended. The events of the evening were commenced by a much appreciated quartette by Misses eLe and Collins and Messrs. Lee and Goodwin.

Mr. Kenner gave a most interesting and educative description of Florence, including separate historical descriptions of the different buildings of ancient fame and origin, also a very clear description of the more famous monuments and statues with which the noted city is dotted. He did not confine his objects of discussion entirely to Florence, but mentioned and described also a number of statues and famous structures in the cities of Rome and Naples. His descriptions were principally of Florence, however, and were made more beautiful by the quotations of poetry, written by the world's famous poets on the beauty of Florence. His lecture was illustrated to great advantage by lantern slides, making a deeper impression and a clear idea of the objects of discussion.

Mr. Kenner told the audience that it had been his pleasure to spend his summer vacation in Florence, Rome and Naples, so that he could speak of the beauty of these cities from experience. He said that excepting Rome, there was no other city in the world as pretty as Florence. While in ancient times Rome was featured more, perhaps, with historical events, yet Florence had defeated her in intellect in later life. He said that Florence was most interesting in its historic places, and the poems of famous poets say that no cities are as fair as Florence. It is the brightest in appearance and possesses a look of perpetual youth. He went on to say that Florence was the producer of proud men. Men proud of the great men she had produced, as well as her own beauty. She produced some of the world's leading poets, artists, sculptors, astronomists, and last, but not least, navigators and discoverers.

Mr. Kenner was tendered a vote of thanks by those present, and a very enjoyable and profitable evening was brought to a close.

THE LIFE STORY AND CAREER OF MARTIN LUTHER

Rev. Dr. Langfeldt Gives an Interesting and Eloquent Address on the Great Reformer at St. Paul's Church Last Night to Delight of a Large Audience.

A large and attentive audience turned out last night to hear an interesting address on 'Martin Luther' by the Rev. Dr. Langfeldt. It did not take the speaker long to instil into the minds of the people the fact that they were being addressed by a well learned authority on the subject in hand, as the speaker himself implied he had travelled throughout Germany visiting many of the places in which Martin Luther spent a greater portion of his life.

During the time of Martin Luther's boyhood, said the speaker, in his opening remarks, Germany, from a religious standpoint, was in a very sad plight. The people had entirely fallen away from the spiritual religion and were adopting a form of external religion. Martin Luther was born of poor parents, his father being a wood cutter, barely earning a scant livelihood. During Martin's early life he was brought up in the fear of the Lord; he exhibited cleverness in school and was of an impetous and sometimes obstinate nature.

His religious training chiefly consisted of the catechism, Lord's prayer and ten commandments in the Latin tongue. When about 16 years of age, his parents, with a view to making him a scholar, sent him to Mattysburg. One year later, he was sent to Islor. While undergoing this course of training away from home, Martin Luther found it very hard to obtain funds enough to keep him from want. He used to augment his income by singing from house to house, until one day a wealthy lady, realizing the future possibilities of the promising young man, took him into her house and provided for him for a period of five years, during which time he made rapid progress in school. Later, he studied law at the request of his father, but finally broke away from this course and entered a convent, where he cultivated a very spiritual nature. During his residence in the monastery he acted in the position of porter, which occupation entailed a considerable amount of physical labour. This, supplemented by the prevailing uneasiness which constantly prevailed in regard to his soul, had a very deteriorating effect on his body, with the result that he was confined to a sick bed for some time.

At the age of 28 he was sent to the University of Wittenberg where he accepted a professorship, shortly afterwards becoming a Bachelor of Divinity.

For some time Martin had since a strong desire to go to Rome, having been impressed with the idea that the Church of Rome and the Pope embodied everything that was worth living for. He shortly after set sail for the glorious city of the seven hills, but was very much disappointed at what he saw.

Among the many of Martin Luther's blessed accomplishments was the translation of the New Testament which was followed by a similar translation of the old. A number of these translations were imported into England, but they were burned at the command of Henry the Eighth. The Pope, being so pleased at that act, gave Henry the Eighth the title, "Defender of the Faith," a title which has since become a permanent one.

At the conclusion of the interesting and intellectual treat provided by Dr. Langfeldt, the Rev. Mr. Pogue moved a hearty vote of thanks, in which he expressed his sincere regret at the coming departure of the reverend doctor. This was seconded by Sheriff Hall.

Inspector Mowat also availed himself of the opportunity of saying a few words in appreciation of Dr. Langfeldt. He spoke of the interest which Dr. Langfeldt had always taken in the Public school in East City, of the regular visits which he had paid to the school, and of the effect of the talks which the Doctor had frequently given upon the life of the boys.

The Young People's Guild of the church have arranged for a series of addresses on "The Makers of Church History." A month ago the Rev. Mr. Trumpour spoke on Wycliffe. Dr. Langfeldt was chosen to speak on Luther, as it was felt that no one whom the young people could secure would deal with the subject in a more thorough or masterly way. The address last evening was listened to with the greatest interest and profit by all present.

More Proofs Of The Profit From Alfalfa

Testimony of Leading and Successful Farmers Unanimous in Favour of the Merits of Alfalfa---Good Money Even in the Sale of Seed.

"Yes, but alfalfa seed is so expensive, Were it not for that I should seed several acres to alfalfa this spring." What of it if the seed is expensive? Some Ontario farmers are making money out of growing alfalfa seed and selling it at the high price it readily commands. Last week, Mr. Marsh, of Peterborough, was up to his old home farm in Grey county and he met one of his neighbours, John Geddes, who last year after taking a splendid crop of hay from the first cutting of his alfalfa secured from the second crop seed that brought him $300 in cash. All of this he got from a small piece of only six acres. Other farmers in the locality of Clarksburg, Ont., have made good money from growing alfalfa seed.

In Prince Edward County too, some of the more progressive farmers who are there growing alfalfa have found out that they can produce alfalfa seed at a big profit. John G. Wease of that county in Farm and Dairy this week is reported to have threshed six bushels of alfalfa seed from one load of alfalfa taken from the second cutting. If farmers elsewhere can grow alfalfa seed at a profit why need Peterborough farmers hesitate to sow expensive alfalfa seed and plan to reap full benefit from high prices that rule for seed?

During recent weeks the experience of probably a score of well known Peterborough county farmers in regard to alfalfa have been given in these columns. Not one man has yet been found who has sown 20 lbs. of alfalfa seed to the acre, provided inoculation (nitro-bacteria) for it, and sown it according to the latest and most approved cultural methods, but has met with success. These men are seeding increased acreages to alfalfa. Their neighbours have seen the splendid results secured from the alfalfa crop and they too are now about to grow alfalfa, starting in this spring.

Actual testimony of leading and successful farmers have been given our readers in regard to alfalfa being invaluable for feeding dairy cows. It is thought by many to be nearly as good as bran. Chemists show us that alfalfa hay has 11 per cent of protein whereas bran has 12 per cent. of protein. Mr. Gordon Mann, of Peterborough, has testified that his milch cows gave more milk when fed alfalfa hay than they did just before they got the hay and when they were being fed two gallons of bran each per day.

Alfalfa has been shown to be good for horses. Mr. Geo. Webber has demonstrated that he can fatten on alfalfa hay alone, without chop. It is known that alfalfa is splendid for sheep, also that it is good for pigs. In fact for pigs the crop is decidedly valuable and many farmers are known to winter their brood sows on alfalfa hay entirely without chop. Experiments conducted at the Maryland Experiment Station showed that pork could be produced at a saving of $1.96 per cwt. of live pork when alfalfa hay, cut fine, was used in the ration along with corn chop and middlings.

What more evidence can one need to convince him that alfalfa is a crop he cannot afford not to grow? Every farmer in Peterborough County ought to grow alfalfa. The special alfalfa competition that has been arranged for the farmers of Peterborough county will afford all who grow alfalfa and enter the competition, free expert instruction as they may require it, on how to grow alfalfa. There is absolutely no cost to those who enter the competition and receive the benefits offered. There is no entry fee. Valuable prizes are offered to those who win out in the competition and all who enter the competition will have the benefit of having an alfalfa expert visit their farm at least twice on which occasions competitors will have a splendid opportunity to obtain first hand information in regard to this great crop, alfalfa. Entries should be sent in at once or as early as possible to Chas. C. Nixon, Secretary of the Competition, care of Farm and Dairy, Peterborough, Ont.

Work Of Horticultural Societies In Other Cities And Towns Of Ontario

Described in an Address by W. H. Robson, the President, Before the Horticultural Society of Lindsay

The following is part of an address delivered before the Lindsay Horticultural Society, by the President, Mr. Wm. Robson. It is deserving of careful and attentive reading:

"Horticulture is in itself, a delightful subject—one that all of us are very intimately connected with, either by its sheer utility, for culinary purposes, or from an intimate love of its adaptability to the pleasures of life. The holding of public meetings is one of the requirements of all Societies that are subsidized by Government. Many of the larger and prosperous Societies in Ontario, extend (or include) in their work, assistance to their cities and municipal Councils, by way of looking after the beautification and sanitation of their respective cities or towns; often acting as Advisory Boards on public parks and school gardens, together with numerous other active improvements. Such a work of practical patriotism must have a decided beneficial effect on the city, and its inhabitants by creating a love of the beautiful in the hearts and homes of the people. "For a thing of beauty is a joy forever" as well as an asset to the town.

Just for a moment let us consider the benefit of conditions and surroundings. When ever it is desirable to realise the highest ideal in the animal or vegetable kingdom, it is absolutely necessary to provide the best conditions and environments to achieve this purpose. Therefore it ought to be one of the highest functions of municipalities to provide for the happiness and efficiency of the people, so as to inspire a love and loyalty for home and town, (so beautifully expressed by Sir Walter Scott in his "Love of Country"). There is at present sixty or more Horticultural Societies in the Province with a membership of over 12,000, receiving from the Provincial Government a grant of from $8,000 to $10,000 annually and this amount is distributed amongst the Societies according to membership. Probably the most prosperous Societies in Ontario are Ottawa, Perth, Toronto, St. Catharines, Galt and London. These all have large grants and are doing a great work in return, by attending to civic improvements and endeavouring to remove all that is objectionable or unsightly, with the object of making surroundings in general more enjoyable. Many of the less influential or smaller societies endeavour to create a spirit of emulation by offering prizes for the best kept lawns, by public competition, thus acting as an auxiliary in assisting the Council of their respective towns.

Voluntary work of this nature is truly worthy of support at all hands from Government and people alike. The City of Ottawa's Society has added to their work a Children's Flower Guild that has proved enjoyable and profitable to all connected with it, being under the patronage of His Excellency the Governor-General and Lady Grey; also many leading citizens and clergy. This branch is presided over by the President of the Provincial Horticultural Society, R. B. Whyte, of Ottawa.

This is a very brief summary of the work the majority of the Societies in the Province of Canada and the United States are at the present time doing. Under such prevailing conditions, the Directors of the Lindsay Society felt it to be their duty to try and infuse new life and more enthusiasm, by striving to get an additional membership so that they might be in a better position to take a part in the necessary improvements of the town. To the lovers of fruit, flowers and general improvements, this would be a desirable fraternity to associate with, as you receive quite a percentage on the dollar invested the following premiums: Literature, trees, shrubs and flowers, or whatever is thought best to distribute by the Society.

In conclusion I might say that an increased membership would not necessarily help the individual member from a pecuniary standpoint, but would materially add to the efficiency of the Society by a correspondingly increased Government grant."

We take an interest in the matters read by the above address, are very cordially invited, to cooperate with the Peterborough Horticultural Society and this can best be done by becoming members. Membership carries with it premiums of plants for beds or window boxes or where, preferred, house plants, and to an amount of money value in excess of the membership fee of $1.00. Mr. Frank Wise, Secretary, who is also Superintendent of Little Lake cemetery, will be glad to furnish membership tickets. The public is urged to join in the campaign.

The Anglican Churches Hold Vestry Meetings Progress Is Reported

St. John's, St. Luke's, All Saints and St. Mark's, Otonabee, Have Their Annual Business Gatherings Last Evening.

A SUCCESSFUL YEAR

ST. JOHN'S.

Most encouraging indeed were the reports presented at the annual Easter session of the vestry of St. John's Church last night. The meeting indicated that the affairs of the church are in a most flourishing condition.

Rev. Canon Davidson presided. It was announced that the offertory on Sunday for the church mortgage debt amounted to $383.

The minutes of the several meetings held during the year were read by the Vestry Clerk, Mr. W. H. Walkey and adopted.

That the funds of the church are in splendid condition, with a good balance on the right side, was shown by the financial statement presented.

The report of the retiring Wardens, Messrs. W. F. Johnston and A. E. Coulthard, contained a recommendation that an honorarium of $50 be given Mr. R. J. Devey, the organist and choir leader. The report was adopted.

Rev. Chas. Carpenter was re-engaged as the Rector's asistant for another year. Rev. Canon Davidson and members of the congregation expressed themselves enthusiastically in reference to the good work accomplished by Mr. Carpenter since coming to Peterborough. Canon Davidson also expressed his appreciation of the services of the Wardens during the year.

Mr. W. F. Johnston, the retiring Rector's Warden, was elected people's warden.

The Rector will nominate his warden at the adjourned session. Mr. W. H. Walkey was re-elected vestry clerk and Mr. J. A. Aylmer appointed as a representative of the Church on the Peterborough Protestant Home Board.

The following were re-appointed lay delegates to the Synod Dr. Boucher, J. H. McClellan and Joseph Mills.

ST. LUKE'S.

The annual vestry meeting of St. Luke's church was held last night. The wardens presented the financial statement. Mr. E. A. Peck acted as chairman and Mr. T. H. Adams vestry clerk. Delegates appointed were Messrs. Henderson, Nesbitt, Ward and Manioce. The meeting then adjourned until May 16th.

ALL SAINTS' CHURCH.

All Saints' Easter Vestry meeting had the largest attendance in the history of the church. A goodly amount of business was done and the meeting was harmonious.

The Rector occupied the chair and conducted the devotional exercises. Mr. F. Dawson was re-elected Vestry Clerk, and later Mr. C. E. Sisson was elected to that position.

Reports were read from the Woman's Auxiliary, the Woman's Guild, the Chancel Guild, Choir, Sunday School, Young People's Society, and other organizations. The receipts of the Auxiliary for the year has been nearly $400, and of the Guild over $1,000.00.

The Rector's report was full of thankfulness for the loyalty of the congregation. Two changes had taken place during the year in the services, the surplicing of the choir, and the institution of Communion every Sunday. The attendance at service was most encouraging, and the worship most congregational. There had been 59 infant and 5 adult baptisms, 28 confirmations, 11 marriages, 21 burials. The number of communicants on Easter Day was nearly 350.

The finances were most encouraging. Plate collections for missions and current expenses were nearly $3,000. The various societies earned between $2,000 and $3,000 more. The new church had, so far, cost nearly $30,000 and was half paid for. The congregation will settle down with determination and enthusiasm to meet outstanding accounts against the building fund and the interest.

Mr. Frank Dawson was elected People's Warden by a most unanimous and enthusiastic standing vote. The congregation is to be congratulated for Mr. Dawson is a man of zeal and of love for his church, of sterling integrity, respected by the people, and a personal friend of the Rector's. With a united congregation behind him, he will bring the finances of the church to an excellent condition. The Rector did not appoint his warden at the meeting; in fact had not considered any one till he could consult with the people's nominee.

Other elections were:

Lay delegates to the Synod—Messrs. McFadden, Spence, and Harry Morgan.

Charity Board—W. Buller.

Nicholls Hospital—J. Green.

Protestant Home—J. Edgar.

Lord's Day Alliance—C. A. G. Spence.

Votes of thanks were tendered Mr. Spence for his services as lay reader, the retiring wardens, the choir, the ladies, for providing surplices for the choir.

The popularity of supplicing the choir was most evident.

The Rector, on motion of Mr. E. L. Davis and H. Morgan, was voted an increase of $200 per year, but owing to the parish having undertaken to provide a Rectory at a previous meeting he asked that the increase be only $100.00. This was unanimously carried.

ST. MARKS', OTONABEE.

The annual Vestry meeting of St. Mark's church was held on Easter Monday, Rev. Dr. Langfeldt acting as chairman. The total receipts of expenditure amounted to about $402, including the sum of $138 for putting a steel-shingle roof on the church. Messrs. Joshua Smithson and Chas. Graystock were re-elected Wardens for the ensuing year. Messrs. Dr. George Burnham, Barlow, Cumberland, lay delegates to the Synod.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the ladies of the congregation for their liberal financial aid given the church; also to Miss Maud Dixon, the efficient organist. It was moved and seconded, to express deep regret to Dr. Langfeldt at his forthcoming separation from the Parish, as their Rector, and to assure him of the people's hearty wishes for his welfare.

A hearty vote of thanks was also tendered Dr. and Mrs. George Burnham for their interest in, and practical assistance given the Parish generously and gladly.

The meeting closed with prayer and the Benediction.

It is said that the Toronto Horse Show this year will exhibit the finest collection of harness horses and jumpers that has ever met together in Canada.

SHE DID NOT WANT TO GO ON THE SHELF

The new comedy, "Green Stockings," that Margaret Anglin is to exploit, treats of the struggle of a young woman to save herself from the fate of an old maid and from being "put on the shelf". At what age may an unmarried woman be said to "be on the shelf" is an interesting question that nowadays is hard to answer. A few decades ago a spinster of thirty summers was considered permanently in the old maid class, but with the development of woman's work, and her advance in independence and self-reliance, it has become impossible to class any woman as being ineligible, even though she be a spinster of forty or more.

GREATEST YEAR THAT LONDON HAS EVER SEEN

This is going to be the largest year that London has ever had in the way of business," said Sir Joseph Lyons; and few men are better qualified to express an opinion.

"And when I say business, I don't mean only the business in which I am particularly interested, though that will probably be affected more than any other. It is going to be a great year for the shopkeepers for the theatres and all other places of ammuse ment. Especially is it going to be a great year for hotels and restaurants. Londoners themselves will naturally be in a festive mood, disposed to spend more money than usual on the entertainment of their friends, and there will be hundreds of thousands, probably over a million, of visitors to the capital of the Empire.

Many, perhaps the majority, of those who come from the Colonies and from foreign countries will be here for the first time. This gives us a great oportunity as a business nation. We shall have an oportunity this year of establishing a goodwill for London, for the whole kingdom such as has never come our way before. If we treat our guests well they will return to us. And I have no doubt we shall treat them well, and remember that, though by charging what may be called 'Coronation prices' we might make a big profit this year, we shall, in the long run, reap a bigger benefit by pleasing our customers. That is a principle I have always carried out in business, and it has succeeded. As a nation of shopkeepers, we cannot do better than adopt it universally this year."

"A considerabe change has come over the position which London occupies in the eye of the Colonial or American visitor in the last ten years," said Sir Joseph. "Before then he was bound for Paris and she took London by the way. Now he comes to London and takes Paris by the way. One of the reasons is that London has a greater range of amusements than any other city in the world. Another is that our restaurants are better, their prices more moderate, and, moreover, that their prices are fixed, and do not vary according to the supposed capacity of the patron to pay."

MILLIONAIRES CROOKS SAYS ONE OF THEM

(New York Journal.)

According to Joseph Fels, a millionaire, all millionaires to-day are legalised crooks. He made this remark about millionaires and crooks to one hundred members of the Twilight Club, in the Hotel Grenoble when he talked on "What Millionaires Should Do With Their Wealth."

"I and most millionaires are legalised crooks," said Mr. Fels in short staccato sentences that held the interest of Hudson Maxim, Count Tolstoy, J. J. Hopper, Judge Minturn of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, Daniel E. Beard, Bolton Hall and other distinguished men. The only amend we can make is to wipe out the conditions that make it possible for us to amass our wealth.

"A millionaire should consider where his wealth comes from," said the speaker. "If it comes from other causes than from the muscle of his right arm or his brain, then let him restore his wealth to those from whom he made it. Let him wipe out those conditions, using the powers and monopolies belonging to the people.

I've Been a Crook."

"Not charity. For charity I consider only another name for the manufacture of beggars.

"I haven't beat a single man out of a dollar. But I've been a crook. I've made money on created values. Six years ago I bought a piece of land near Philadelphia for $32,740. Now I could get close to $125,000 for it. Why? Because 3,000 homes have been built in the vicinity of that land. A trolley line has been run near it. The people have created values for me. I did nothing. This is robbery. It is taking things created by the public for private use. But, may heaven witness, I shall return this surplus to the rightful owners.

"Why do we have beggars in this land flowing with milk and honey. The United States has enough land to support one thousand million people. There is enough land locked up as deer parks in England for the sport of the rich to support one hundred million people.

Canada Getting Our People.

"All the land in the United States and England should be thrown open to the people—its natural owners. If we could do that this country would be so beautiful that you wouldn't want to go to that other paradise.

"In Canada they're fining people for holding and not using land. The result is land is thrown on the market and 140,000 inhabitants of these United States are crossing the border every year in the Northwest to live in Canada. Your papers say they're coming back. That's true to this extent: They're coming back to take over their friends and relatives."

WEDDING BELLS

WILSON—BATES.

A quiet, but pretty, wedding was solemnized in St. John's Anglican Church, Saskatoon, on Wednesday evening, March 29, when Mr. Arthur Wilson, of Dinsmore, Sask., son of Mr. Noble Wilson of Boothville, Ont., Miss Annie M. Bates, eldest daughter of Mr. J) C. Bates, of Burleigh Falls, Ont., were united in bonds of holy matrimony by Rev. E. B. Smith of Saskatoon. To the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, the bridal party took their places before the altar, promptly at six o'clock. The bride was handsomely attired in a beautiful gown of white embroidered point d'esprit net, over silk, trimmed with satin banding, and was attended by Miss Phylis Shelton, while the groom was supported by Mr. John Powers.

At the conclusion of the ceremony the happy couple left the church amid the pealing of the beautiful chimes of St. John's.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson left Saskatoon Thursday evening for "Rosedale Farm," Dinsmore, where Mr. Wilson has been a prosperous farmer for several years, and where they intend making their home, the bride's travelling costume was of royal blue velvet, with velvet hat.

The presents received were numerous and valuable, testifying to the high esteem in which the young couple are held, among them being a handsome piano-cased organ, the gift of the bride's parents.

COMMENT ON THE HIGHER CRITICS

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir, — Will you kindly give place to the following extract from a sermon delivered by Rev. Dr. Parsons, pastor emeritus of Knox, Presbyterian church, Toronto. Dr. Parsons is one of the oldest and most venerable Presbyterian ministers of Toronto, with a long and illustrious pulpit career, scholarly in both a general an dtheological sense, with the old time veneration for the great fundamental principles of Christianity. In his sermon on the Resurrection on Easter Sunday, he is reported in the Globe as speaking to this effect in regard to the danger of the higher criticism:

His sermon was based on the text, Romans, 1, 3-4, and was a simple but convincing exposition of the doctrine of the resurrection. He pointed out te danger lurking in the present-day tendency to regard God as a great principle rather than as a person. He stated that the trouble with high learning and science was that they would eliminate all the really essential truths and teachings of the Bible and thus destroy it. There was no denying the truth of the teaching that the only meeting-place of the complete divine nature an dthe complete human nature was in Jesus Christ. Many regarded the doctrine of the Trinity and the Resurrection as inscrutable mysteries, but if they had simple faith all these teachings would be as clear as the sunlight to them.

"The moment high learning and education and science," said the preacher, "take hold of the doctrine of the Resurrection and try to interpret it, it becomes darkness and quite inconscionable, but by faith it is clear." The human mind, he pointed out, was the great expression of God.

There was a new theory of morality coming into the world to-day with a fearful shock which was contrary to the will of God and which connived at the small indulgences. All sin was punishable by God, and Jesus Christ on the cross met the sentence of the infinite justice of God.

Now, I, a humble Christian, with an "old fashioned"—as regarded by the new-fangled belief in the whole Bible—perfectly agree with the venerable Dr. Parsons whose life of 89 years has been mainly spent in searching and studying the scriptures. He is as competent to interpret them as the new teachers, whose "itching ears are cocked to catch th epraises of men for the great learning that they display in destroying the Word of God, and discrediting the great commentators. I believe that there are millions of deluded believers of the Bible in its entirety who are safe in heaven. Yet now we must forsooth, desert the old ways and follow the new lead of the new blind guides.

Yours, etc.,
VERITAS.

HON. MR. PATERSON MAKES A REPLY TO HIS CRITICS

Minister of Customs Addresses Meeting at Paris, Dealing Entirely With the Reciprocity Issue---Expresses Surprise That There Should be a Fuss Over an Arrangement Both Parties Had Endeavoured to Secure.

Brantford, April 19.—Hon. William Paterson addressed a mass meeting of his North Brant constituents in the town hall of Paris yesterday, dealing entirely with the reciprocity issue, and defending the proposed trade arrangement with the United States. The Minister of Customs was well received and the audience was swelled by a number of prominent Brantford Liberals. At the close of the meeting a resolution was endorsed approving of reciprocity.

The Minister of Customs expressed surprise that such a fuss had been raised by the Conservatives over an arrangement which both parties in Canada had endeavored to secure for the past forty years, and which was laid down as a standing offer in the national policy of Sir John Macdonald. The agreement was only [illegible] made possible by a change of sentiment in the United States towards Canada. Mr. Paterson declared annexation a bogey, and retorted to his critics, who accused him of perfidy to his country's interests, that he considered it offensive insult, but he considered at the same time where it came from. The prosperity of the farmers was the chief benefit to be derived from the agreement, and if the farmers of Canada were prosperous two-thirds of the country would be in a similar condition.

In conclusion, Mr. Paterson expressed the opinion that both Governments would adopt the agreement and the people would decide the question within a year.

WILKINSON PLOW WORKS HAS GONE TO THE WALL

Celebrated Concern Which Has Been in Business in Canada for 35 Years Assigns to E. R. Clarkson

COMPETITION TOO MUCH

Toronto, April 19.—The announcement was made yesterday of the assignment of the Wilkinson Plow Works to E. R. C. Clarkson. The failure of this firm, one of the largest and oldest of its kind in Canada, comes third, outside of the mere loss of work for some 175 hands working in the factories in West Toronto, that there are now left in Canada only two firms manufacturing agricultural implements on a large scale. The company's assets exceed the liabilities by from $100,000 to $200,000, but a writ had been issued by creditors for the winding up of the firm, and capital to overcome the difficulties could not be obtained.

The Wilkinson Plow Works is a joint stock company with $190,000 in subscribed capital; the assets run between $400,000 and $500,000, and the liabilities some $300,000. The concern was started by the man whose name the company still bears some 35 years ago in the Town of Aurora, as a small joint stock company, removing later to what was at that time the Town of Toronto Junction. This was nearly 25 years ago. Under the practical methods of Mr. Wilkinson the company appeared to prosper at this period, and continued to do so until his departure from the firm nine years ago. Personal friends of Wilkinson declare that he was dissatisfied with the treatment he received from other members of the firm at that time. He went from the firm he had started to the Verity Plow Works of Brantford, and is now located with the Cockshutt Works.

A readjustment of the firm was made some two or three years ago, when the Wilkinson Works either amalgamated with or bought out the West Lorne Wagon Works of West Lorne, Ontario, owned by McKillop Brothers, wealthy lumbermen of that place. It is declared that the McKillops bought a large block of stock of the plow works at this time. It is probable that aside from a few of those closely interested in the concern, the stock is divided into small holdings.

Several opinions have been given by those connected with the business of manufacturing agricultural implements that seem to throw light on the West Toronto firm. One gentleman last night declared that the chief reason for the Wilkinson failure was on account of the keen competition of the Canadian trade.

Miners Parade Streets.

Latrobe, Pa., April 19.—Ten thousand miners, with their wives and children, paraded the streets of the boroughs and communities in the Irwin coal fields of Westmoreland County yesterday, in celebration of a year's fidelity to their unions—a year of strike characterized with much violence. Following the parade, meetings were held in the little theatres and halls of the mining communities, which were addressed by labor leaders from this section of the state. The balance of the day and evening was given up to merrymaking.

Missouri Pacific's New President.

New York, April 19.—Although recently forced out of the position himself, George J. Gould, opposing the Rockefeller - Kuhn - Loeb interests, brought about the election yesterday of B. F. Bush as his successor as president of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, defeating the opposition candidate, David R. Francis, former governor of Missouri. Mr. Bush is president of the Western Maryland Railway.

A true bill was found against M. T. Buchanan at St. Thomas in connection with the Oxford graft charges.

The man found dead at the Union House, Toronto, on April 9 proves to have been Fred A. King of Brockville.

For the third time in succession, Joseph A. Chisholm, K.C., has been elected mayor of Halifax. Yesterday his election was by acclamation.

Six convictions on charges of selling liquor without a license were registered yesterday by Magistrate Atkinson. Four pleading guilty, were fined $100 and costs.

As the steamer Wauketa was passing here yesterday James Reese, a passenger, attempted suicide by jumping through a porthole. He was arrested and is now in jail at Port Huron.

The British Commons held another all-night sitting last night. At 4.30 this morning the first clause of the Parliament bill, popularly known as the "veto" bill, was carried under closure by 142 to 78.

Daniel J. McGurk, letter carrier, pleaded guilty to theft of $1.50 in marked money which had been placed in a letter given him for delivery. Magistrate Denison, Toronto, sentenced him to five years at Kingston.

It is now stated that the union station in Quebec city will be much larger than originally planned. It was at first supposed that the structure would cost three-quarters of a million, but it is now expected that the cost will reach over a million.

Ottawa City Council last night decided to send Mayor Hopewell to represent the capital at the coronation of King George V., and to present an address to His Majesty on the occasion. The city solicitor warned them that the proposed expenditure was illegal.

The plebiscite on the question of a commission form of government consisting of five commissioners, instead of the present system of a mayor and seventeen aldermen, resulted in a victory for a commission government at St. John, N.B., yesterday by about 2,200 majority.

Must Obey the Law.

Chatham, April 19.—The West Kent License Commissioners yesterday cut off two licenses—the Half-Way House and the Montreal House at Dover. Inspector French made strong charges against the character of seven proprietors of the houses asking licenses. Five hotels in Chatham, the Aberdeen, the Idlewild, the Park House, the Grand Central and the Tecumseh House were given three months in which to show that they can run law-abiding houses or have their licenses taken away. This action also was taken on the advice of the inspector. Rather than recommend any of these hotels to a license, "I will resign my job first," said he.

Burglarized Ginger Ale Works.

Brockville, April 19.—For burglarizing the St. Lawrence Ginger Ale Works, Daniel Brown was sentenced in the Police Court to six months in the Central Prison. The prisoner implicated two brothers, for whose arrest warrants are now in the hands of the police. Four kegs of beer and soft drinks, together with pumps, etc., constituted the stolen property, which clears up certain burglaries committed within the past six months.

The mother of the young men is in jail awaiting trial on the charge of receiving stolen goods. She was hopelessly drunk with a beer keg beside her when taken into custody. With these arrests, the police believe they have broken up an organized gang of thieves.

DEMOCRATS PREPARING FOR A PLOT BY REPUBLICANS

Think the Opposition to Reciprocity Are Going to Spring an Amendment on Them—May End Debate To-day.

PASSED ON THURSDAY

Washington, April 19.—Democratic leaders are prepared for an attempt by some of the Republicans who oppose the Canadian reciprocity bill to embarrass the Democratic majority in the passage of the bill, by proposing as an amendment to it a section embodying all the free list that the Democratic ways and means committee has prepared as the first of the party's tariff measures.

Opposition Republicans have charged in the House that if the Democrats were in earnest in their desire to this free list passed, they would offer it as a part of the reciprocity bill, so that President Taft could not find occasion to veto it, even though it did not meet with his approval.

Chairman Underwood of the ways and means committee, is apparently proceeding on the belief that an amendment to tack the free list to the reciprocity bill will be offered when the bill comes up for passage. He said yesterday that such an amendment would be at once ruled out of order, as it could not be considered "germane to the bill" under the public rules permitting the offering of amendments. The only amendments that can be considered are those specifically affecting duties contained in the reciprocity agreement; and on all such amendments it is expected there will be overwhelming negative votes, so that no change in the form of the reciprocity bill can be effected.

An effort is to be made to wind up the open debate on the Canadian trade agreement to-day. Former Speaker Cannon will address the House at the opening of the session to-day, and a number of other speeches are scheduled for the day. If Mr. Underwood is successful in bringing the general debate to a close to-night, the bill will be brought up for final consideration, amendment and passage to-morrow.

Henry George, jr., of New York, in his maiden speech in the House during the reciprocity debate yesterday, proclaimed himself a free trader, and said he had aligned himself with the Democratic party because he believed it was the only great party that was "marching toward the light." Mr. George endorsed the Canadian agreement as tending toward freer trade, and believed that eventually the United States would have unlimited free trade with the world.

His speech, though closely followed by Democrats and Republicans alike, did not arouse any great enthusiasm on the Democratic side. Later Representative Pickett of Iowa used Mr. George's words to show that the Democratic party was urging the reciprocity agreement in the belief that it would end in free trade.

Representatives Rowland of Ohio, Konop of Wisconsin, and Gillette of Massachusetts, spoke in favor of the agreement. Mr. Gillette characterized the talk of annexation as "bugaboo and sensation," but said it may well happen that some time the United States and Canada, who have grown so close together in trade relations and in sentiment, will unite their destinies under one flag.

In an anti-reciprocity speech, Representative Hamilton of Michigan, a Republican, quoted Secretary Wilson to the effect that the farmer gets nearly fifty per cent. of what the consumer pays for farm products, and added: "That was before the exigencies of cabinet service made it necessary for him to modify some of the views he had before expressed."

Police Chief Sentenced.

Pembroke, April 19.—Before Police Chief John Mattson was sentenced to twelve months in jail yesterday afternoon, for having stolen the town funds of Arnprior, he asked Judge Donnelse for leniency for himself, on account of his wife and children.

The judge said he did not think the police chief intended to steal one farthing, but had acted foolishly. Since he had proved like sneak thieves. Many of the robbers who relieved people of their money were not like the accused. He wished to pass a sentence first to satisfy the public, and second to discharge his duty. The amount stolen was $11,246.

Agua Prieta Taken.

Agua Prieta, Mex., April 19.—The battle of Agua Prieta, which continued for nearly twenty-four hours, was won by the Mexican Federal forces, which occupied the town at daylight yesterday. The rebels, their supply of ammunition and provisions exhausted, evacuated Agua Prieta an hour before the Government troops arrived.

Paris Editor Dead.

Paris, Ont., April 19.—The death took place yesterday of A. E. Kinder, formerly editor of The Paris Review. He was ill only a few days, death being due to pneumonia. He was for 34 years cashier in the Grand Trunk freight office at Strathroy before removing to Paris. His widow, five brothers and two sisters survive.

ADVISES PROTEST

W. M. German Addresses a Delegation at Welland—They Do Not Want a New Canal—Will Present Their Views

IMPORTANT MEETING

Welland, April 19.—Some fifty delegates from points along the canal met at Welland yesterday afternoon to decide what action should be taken toward securing the deepening of the present canal with a slight change of route, rather than a building of an entirely new canal. The result was the election of a committee composed of D. McGillivary of Port Colborne, Dr. Merritt of St. Catharines, Mr. Clark of Port Dalhousie, James Battle of Thorold, J. H. LeFevre of Welland, John H. Thompson of Thorold, A. R. Thompson of Merritton, Jesse Steel of Humberstone and E. Norriss of Fonthill. It was decided that a deputation be sent to Ottawa on May 11 to interview the Minister of Railways and Canals.

One of the important announcements made in the meeting was that made by W. M. German, M.P., when he stated that so far as Welland and Port Colborne were concerned, the matter was not of such great interest as to the municipalities further south, for he had the best of assurances from those in authority that the present Welland Canal in case an entirely new canal was built, would be enlarged to twenty-two feet from Port Colborne to Welland, with lockages to the Welland River to join the Welland Canal.

The Georgian Bay Canal scheme was being pushed, but he could not see how any sensible man could ever agree to such a proposition as the building of a twenty-two or twenty-five foot canal from Georgian Bay to Montreal at a cost of $200,000,000.

Mr. German thought this was the opportune time for the representatives of the municipalities to get to work. "I know," he said, "what Weller thinks. I have no better friend than he. He has no better friend than I am. I know what he wants to do. He wants to build a canal from Montreal to Jordan and I don't want him to do it. I want the people to get up on their hind legs and get down to Ottawa and get there quick, for the Greenville route is the legitimate route for the Welland Canal. It will make St. Catharines a deep waterway harbor and give that city as well as the other towns and cities along the line all the benefits of deep water navigation. Now is the time to get busy. I would suggest that each town, village or city appoint two or three men to go to Ottawa and interview Mr. Graham. Tell him that towns and cities have been built up along the Welland Canal by reason of the canal being where it is."

Captain Irwin, one of the best known navigators on the great lakes, pointed out that a harbor could never be built at Morgan's Point with such safety to vessels as at Port Colborne, for the reason that the prevailing gales from the southwest which would bring vessels into the harbor in the trough of the sea. A similar reason held good at Port Dalhousie, where the prevailing gales were from the northeast. The further west the harbor was located from Port Dalhousie the more dangerous the position. He knew Jordan Harbor well and was certain from the nature of its shifting sand that it could never be made safe and satisfactory for a harbor.

This opinion was also voiced by De W. Carter of Port Colborne. He knew Jordan Harbor to be a bed of quicksand. One autumn he left that harbor with a depth of twelve feet, and on returning in the spring it was so filled up that a tug drawing six feet could not enter. The votes of the municipality should be impressed upon the Government, and he hoped they would not find themselves in the same situation as the fruit growers who were told they were too late.

South Essex Liberals Meet.

Kingsville, April 19.—At the convention of the South Essex Liberal Association yesterday, John Auld, ex-M.P.P., was nominated for the Legislature. The riding of the present member of the Commons, A. H. Clarke, was the only one presented for the Pedneld House, and although he announced that he had decided to drop out, he has taken the matter under consideration and will announce his decision later. He said that the pressure brought to bear on him made him feel like changing his mind.

A resolution endorsing reciprocity was passed following an address by Hon. A. G. MacKay.

Her Hair Turned Green.

New York, April 19.—Mrs. Adeline K. Lawson, of San Francisco, a young woman whose hair was made grey by the earthquake, brought suit in the Supreme Court against Mmes. Poly and Klark, hairdressers, for $50,000 damages, charging that they dyed her hair green when engaged to restore its natural color. The verdancy is attributed to alleged poisonous substances in the dye which Mrs. Lewison says she was told would make her hair black. The defendants allege that Mrs. Lewison agreed to assume whatever there might be of damage to her skin and hair resulting from the treatment.

Bishop Barred Ritual.

Norfolk, Va., April 19.—Bishop Randolph's "goodly admonition," barring service intoning and other high church ritual forms in the Episcopal churches, will stand, but Rev. Dr. Steinmetz, rector of Christ Church, who has had a controversy on the subject with Bishop Randolph, will be permitted to take up individual features of the ritual for separate rulings. The burning of candles on the altar is among the high church features in vogue at Christ Church.

Penitentiary Guard's Suicide.

Kingston, April 19.—Edward Cowan, about 40 years of age, a guard at the penitentiary, walked out of his house last night, pulled a revolver out of his pocket and shot himself twice in the head. Death was almost instantaneous. Cowan had been in ill-health for some time. He came from Gananoque. A wife survives him.

A Committee of Safety.

New York, April 19.—In the wake of the Washington place fire there resulted yesterday the organization of the "Committee of Safety of New York City," with a membership composed of delegates of many associations, and a far-reaching program of protecting the lives of factory workers. Miss Anne Morgan, a daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan; George W. Perkins, the financier and banker, and Henry L. Stimson, Republican candidate for governor of New York last year, are among the prime movers. Mr. Stimson was elected president.

Found Dead In Bath.

Montreal, April 19.—Mr. Arsene Robitaille, a partner in the firm of Messrs. Lawrence and Robitaille, lumber merchants, was found dead in his bath yesterday morning. Mr. Robitaille had seemed to be in his usual good health, but as the medical examination after death showed that his heart must have been in a weak condition, it is supposed that the shock of the cold water was the cause of his death.

Armistice Probable.

Mexico City, April 19.—A proposition for an armistice pending negotiations for a settlement of Mexico's internal troubles, were received by the Department of Foreign Relations yesterday from Washington, presumably from Dr. Vasquez Gomez.

A reply was returned, in which it was indicated that the Government looked with favor upon the suggestion.

GREAT FACTORY FOR AEROPLANES

Sir Hiram Maxim, Graham White, and M. Bleriot are Working Together Near London

In the little suburban village of Hendon, less than seven miles, as the crow flies, from the royal palace of Buckingham, Sir Hiram Maxim, because of his great love of peace, is planning to construct the most formidable engines of destruction the world has ever seen, hoping they will make war impossible in a near future. On a smooth stretch of ground, comprising nearly 400 acres, Mr. Maxim, Mr. Graham-White, and M. Bleriot, working together for the first time, will erect the most up-to-date aeroplane factory in the world, in which aeroplanes are to be built, half a dozen of which will be enough to defend the coast of England against any attempted German attack and send the Kaiser's proud ironclads to the bottom of the North Sea with thousands of men before they shall have been able to aim their guns.

But this will not be all. With every constructional facility at their command, and with a large staff of skilled workers to call upon, these three renowned experts will collaborate in the construction of new types of aeroplanes, which will be built in the factory and immediately tested on the neighboring aerodrome by special pilots. Mr. Graham White, M. Bleriot and Sir Hiram Maxim will direct keen attention to the development of the war aeroplane: to the evolution of simple, practical machines to encourage the sporting and pleasure-seeking aspects of airmanship; and also to the building of special passenger-carrying types of aeroplanes.

All three, judging from their expert knowledge of flying, believe that—now the aeroplane has emerged from the experimental into the practical—there will be during the coming flying season a vast forward stride in connection with airmanship, chiefly as regards its military and sporting possibilities, and also in the matter of pleasure cruises and organized tours through the air. To popularise the making of tours throughout England by aeroplanes, also to stimulate week-end aeroplane trips undertaken in the same way as motor-car "week-ends" are no wenjoyed. Mr. Graham White and others are seeking to arrange for special aerodromes, with sheds and facilities, to be erected at pleasure resorts throughout the country. Not only for reconnoitring and dispatch-carrying, but also for destruction work—a field in which Sir Hiram Maxim will experiment exhaustively—will aeroplanes be constructed.

STRANGE BURIAL STORY

Corpse Was Found to be in Perfect Preservation

A strange burial story emanates from Cerreto Sannito, near Naples. Sixteen years ago Monsignor Sado was buried in the cemetery there, but recently, the family deciding to remove the coffin elsewhere, the corpse was exhumed. It was found to be in such a state of perfect preservation that the viscera had not been affected by putrefaction at all. Also remarkable was the fact that the lungs, spleen, heart, and kidneys, although separately removed, still contained some coagulated blood. The organs have been sent to Naples for scientific examination.

SIFT THE IMMIGRANTS

The First British Station for the Purpose will be Built at Tilbury

The Port of London and afterwards several other English ports are to have their Ellis' Islands in order to sift the ever-increasing tide of immigrants arriving in England, including even those who are passing through here on the way to North America. Every man, woman and child arriving there will have to declare that he is no anarchist, socialist or admirer of Bernard Shaw, that he is not a fugitive from criminal justice and that he owns the necessary amount of money that is considered a guarantee that he will not become a public charge, and only after passing through this purgatory will he be turned over to the tender mercies of the Jews of East End. The first British immigration station is to be built at Tilbury at the mouth of the Thames, where a large shed has already been offered to the government, but it will be followed by others at Dover, Grimsby, Harwich, Folkestone and New Haven.

Cured Eczema and Dandruff

"I am pleased to inform you that I have been cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Since I was a boy I have suffered with dandruff, not only from the itching but from its disagreeable appearance in a scaly form all over my head. I had to brush it off my clothes all day long. I used every kind of preparation supposed to cure dandruff, also soaps and shampoos, but it seemed to me that, instead of improving with these remedies, the dandruff increased, even my hair began to fall out and the result was that two months ago eczema developed on my scalp.

"I suffered so from this that as a last resource I thought I would try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. They had the most gratifying results for I had used only one box of Cuticura Ointment and a single cake of Cuticura Soap when I was cured, the eczema and dandruff were gone and my head perfectly clear.

"I can assure you that so long as I live no other soap than Cuticura will be used by me and all those near to me. I will also add that I will always use Cuticura Ointment as a dressing for the hair. I feel that you should know of my cure and if you desire you may use this as a true testimonial which comes from a sufferer of thirty years' standing. I will be happy to tell any one of my experience in order to assist those who may be suffering from the same disease." (Signed) J. ACEVEDO, General Commission Merchant, 59 Pearl St., New York.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment afford the speediest and most economical treatment for itching, burning, scaly humours of infants, children and adults. As in this case, a single set is often sufficient. Sold throughout the world. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Boston, U. S. A., for 32-page Cuticura Book on treatment of skin and scalp affections.

TAXI-DRIVERS SCARCE

Due to the Severe Test Imposed on Them by the Scotland Yard

London is threatened with a scarcity of taxi-drivers. It is not because there is a dearth of candidates, or through any distaste for the calling, or any difficulty in receiving lessons on driving, but the reason is simply attributable to the severe test imposed on would-be drivers by Scotland Yard, which comparatively few, even after undergoing a thorough course of training, are able to pass. By establishing a school of instruction at a cost of $2,500 to $4,000 a month, the British Motor Cab Company, of Pimlico, are endeavoring to meet the demand for drivers. Since January last the school has been open, free of cost to candidates, but, although the scheme of instruction has been most complete and thorough, only 32 men out of 450 sent to Scotland Yard to be examined on London topography have passed. For the most part the candidates are former soldiers, messenger boys, and horse cab-drivers, and they are not below the average in intelligence.

THE HORSE SHOW

Canadians Will Exhibit at the Big Event in London

It is now practically certain that a team of German officers will compete for the King Edward Cup at the International Horse Show in June—a competition from which the Germany Army has hitherto held aloof. The Russian and United States armies are also entering teams for the first time. France and Belgium are again entering teams, but the participation of Austria-Hungary and Italy is doubtful. The officers of King Victor Emmanuel are such accomplished masters of equitation that their absence, owing to the celebrations of the jubilee of the House of Savoy, will be greatly regretted. The Hon. Clifford Sifton, Ottawa, is attending the show again this year, and his son, Lieut. Sifton, will be in the Canadian team. The hope is also entertained that teams representing Australia and South Africa will be picked out of the troops which are coming over to attend the Coronation.

In an Old Coat.

Bank notes and securities worth $60,000 were found in an old coat belonging to a Greek beggar who died at Kazaka, Roumania. His widow, who found them, had believed throughout her married life that her husband was a poor man. She had never dared to search her husband's pockets, as some wives are said to do.

Wolves in Quebec.

Wolves are reported in large numbers in the neighborhood of Bauchette, Quebec, and Mr. Alf. Thorien, of 31 Mile Lake, succeeded in poisoning three of these pests, obtaining a good price for the pelts as well as the bounties. Mr. S. Day, of Cameron, obtained a very large wolf in the same way and presented the tanned pelt to Rev. B. S. Robinson, of Ottawa.

Brought Down a Cougar.

Melton Beam, of Creston, B.C., shot a cougar after his dog had treed the animal. When measured it was found to be over eight feet long. As there is a bounty of $15 on cougars and the hide was sold at a good price the hunter did a good day's work.

ROYAL VISIT TO WALES

The King Will Attend the Investiture of the Prince.

At a meeting of the representatives of the Bangor University College and the Bangor City Council, held at Bangor recently, Lord Kenyson, President of the College, announced that the dates of the Royal visit to North Wales had at last been definitely decided upon as follows:—On the 18th July His Majesty will leave Dublin in the Royal yacht for Holyhead, whence the King and the Royal party will proceed by Royal train to Carnarvon for the investiture of the Prince of Wales, returning to the Royal yacht immediately after the ceremony. On the 14th the King will again leave Holyhead by train for Bangor, where in the afternoon he will formally open the new University College buildings, afterwards again returning to Holyhead. On the 15th his Majesty will proceed to Aberystwyth to lay the foundation of a new building there.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA AND THE FUTURE KING GEORGE

MADE IN GERMANY

Souvenirs Are Being Sold in London From Continental Countries.

How shall we know during the coming Coronation festivities that the Coronation medals we shall wear are not of the "made in Germany" variety? At the last Coronation these foreign souvenirs flooded the country, and, according to several English manufacturers, they are already being shipped into this country in large consignments again. "Most of them are so well done," said one manufacturer, "that the public could not tell them from our home-made medals. They are forwarded in boxes stamped 'Made in Germany,' but as soon as they have passed the Customs the boxes are discarded and the souvenirs, which have no mark as to their origin, are sent out broadcast. They are made in white metal generally, and bear the King's head, or their Majesties' heads together, with the Royal Arms on the reverse side.

Some of them that have arrived have apparently been made with the die from which the King Edward souvenir medals were made, with the late King's face altered to represent King George. German medals are not the only foreign things with which the British public will be fooled this year. Large consignments of other patriotic emblems are being shipped over here by our industrious Teutonic cousins, and as they are generally made to sell at a very much lower price than similar articles made in England our trade is naturally very seriously affected by them."

A HOT SUMMER

Dr. Maurer Predicts that the Coming Season Will be the Hottest in Five Years

Dr. Maurer, director of the Observatory of Zurich, declares that the hottest weather for the past five years will be experienced this summer. He points out that from 1906 to 1910 there has been a most marked depression in the temperature, but this is not unprecedented. Similar weather phenomena have occurred many times during the past century, the most memorable period being from 1886 to 1890. These periods were invariably followed by extremes in heat, and Dr. Maurer declares that the present year will not prove an exception to the rule.

Doctor Told Her She Did Not Have A Pint Of Good Blood In Her Body.

Mrs. Dosithe P. Cormier, Middle Sackville, N.B., says:

"In the spring of 1897 I was all run down, and the doctor told me I had not a pint of good blood in my body. I took different remedies from doctors, but they did not seem to do me any good. After having taken a lot of different other kinds of medicine, and they did not seem to benefit me, I was almost in despair and did not know what to do until my husband met a lady and told her about my sickness and she told him to try Burdock Blood Bitters as she had received the greatest benefit from using it. My husband went and bought me a bottle, and after having taken it I felt better, so I kept on using one bottle after another until I had taken six in all and then I was strong and well. I am positive that my being alive to-day is due to the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. One spring since then I was not feeling very well and had a lot of work to do. I thought I would procure a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters and after I had taken two I was able to do a lot of hard work all the summer, and I never felt better in my life. In the winter of 1906 I had Pneumonia, and it left me with a severe pain in the left side. Every morning when I would get out of bed I had to sit down for a while it was so painful. After I had used Burdock Blood Bitters the pain disappeared completely. It has also cured me of bleeding piles. I have received so much benefit from Burdock Blood Bitters that you may publish this as it may help others as it has me."

By OLIVE H. BRIGGS

The theme was still running, the black notes dancing; but between them intertwined was a face, upturned, exquisite, the eyes pleading, the lips parted, hands clasped and beckoning That night at the Mariinski—ah!

He had searched for her everywhere. Ushers had flown from loggia to loggia, ransacking the Theatre. Next to the Imperial Box, or was it the second? To the right?—no, the left! Below, or perhaps on the Bel-Etage?—All in vain. Was it only a dream? He stared down at the twist of paper blotted "Kaya—to-night."

Her name came to his lips and he repeated it aloud, smiling to himself, musing. His eyes gazed into the coals, dreamy, heavy, half open, gleaming like dark slits under the brows. They closed gradually and his head fell lower. His hands relaxed. The violin lay on his breast, his pale cheek resting against the arch.

He was asleep.

All of a sudden there came a light tap on the door. A pause, a tap, still lighter; then another pause.

Velasco raised his head and tossed back his hair restlessly; his eyes dropped again.

"Tap—tap."

He started and listened.

Some one was at the Studio door—something. It was like the flutter of a bird's wing against the oak, softly, persistently.

"Tap—tap."

He rose slowly, reluctantly to his feet and went to the door. It was strange, inexplicable. After two, and the mood was gone, the night was dark—unless—An eager look came into his eyes.

"Who is there?" he cried, "Who are you? What do you want?"

A silence followed, as if the bird had poised suddenly with wings outstretched, hovering. Then it came again against the oak: "Tap—tap."

Velasco threw open the door: "Boshe moi!"

As he did so a woman's figure, slim and small, hooded and wrapped in a long, black cloak, darted inside, and snatching the door from his hand, closed it behind her rapidly, fearfully, glancing back into the darkness. The woman was panting under the hood. She braced herself against the door, still clasping the bolt as though a weapon. Her back was crooked beneath the cloak and she seemed to be crippled.

Velasco drew back. His eagerness vanished and the light died out of his face. "Who in the name of—" He hesitated: "What in the world—" Then he hesitated again, his dark eyes blinking under his brows.

The woman stretched her hands from under the cloak, clasping them. She was fighting hard for her breath.

"Tell me, Monsieur," she whispered, "Tell me quickly—are you married? Are you going alone to Germany?" Her voice shook and trembled: "Oh, tell me,—quickly."

"Married, my good woman!" exclaimed Velasco. His eyes opened wide and he drew back a little further: "Why, really, Madame — Of course I am going alone to Germany. What do you mean? How extraordinary!"

"Quite alone?" repeated the woman, 'no friend, no manager? Oh then sir, do me the little favour, the kindness—it will cost you nothing—I shall never forget it—I shall bless you all the days of my life."

She took a step forward, limping. Velasco recovered himself.

"Sit down, Madame," he said, "and explain. You are trembling so. Let me give you some wine.—Wait a minute. There,—is it money you want? Tell me."

His manner was that of a prince to a beggar, lofty, authoritative, kindly, indifferent. "Sit down, Madame."

The woman shrank back against the door, and her hand fled to the bolt as if seeking support. "No—no!" she murmured. "You don't understand. "It's not for—not money! I'm in trouble, danger. Don't you see? I must flee from Russia—now, at once. You are going to Germany alone, to-morrow night. Take me with you—take me with — you!"

An irritated look came over Velasco's face. Was the creature mad? "That is nonsense," he said, "I can not take any one with me, and I wouldn't if I could. Besides there is only one passport."

The woman put her hand to her breast. It was throbbing madly under the cloak. "You could take—your—wife," she whispered, "Your wife. No one would suspect."

"Really, my dear Madame!"

Velasco yawned behind his palm. "What you say is simply absurd. I tell you I have no wife."

She stretched out her hands to him. "You are a Pole, a Pole!" Her voice rose passionately. "Surely you have suffered; you hate Russia, this cruel, wicked, tyrannous government. Your sympathy is with us, the people, the Liberals, who are trying — oh, I tell you—I must go, at once! After to-morrow it is death, don't you understand,—death! What is it to you, the matter of another passport? You are Velasco!—Every one knows that name, every one. Your wife goes with you to Germany. Oh, take me—take me—I beseech you."

The Violinist stared down at the hooded face. Her voice was tense and vibrating like the tones of an instrument. It moved him strangely. He felt a curious numbness in his throat and a wave passed over him like a chill. She went on, her hands wrung together under the cloak:

"It isn't much I ask. The journey together—at the frontier we part—part forever. The marriage, oh listen—that is nothing, a ceremony, a farce just a certificate to show the police—the police—"

Her voice died away in a whisper, broken, panting. She fell back against the door, bracing herself against it, gazing up into his eyes.

Velasco stood motionless for a moment; then he turned on his heel and strode over to the fire-place, staring down into the coals. The sight of that bent and shrinking figure, a woman, old and feeble, trembling like a creature hunted, unmanned him.

"I can't do it," he said slowly, "Do not ask me. I am a musician. I have no interest in politics. There is too much risk. I can't, Madame. I can't."

He felt her coming towards him. The flutter of her cloak, it touched him, and her step was light, like a bird limping.

"You read it?" she whispered, "I saw you at the Mariinski; and there—there are the violets on the table, by the violin. Have you forgotten?"

Velasco started: "Who are you?" he exclaimed. "Not Kaya!" He wheeled around and faced her savagely: "You Kaya, never! Was it you who threw the violets—you?"

His dark eyes measured the shrinking form, bent and crippled, shrouded; and he cried out in his disappointment like a peevish boy: "I thought it was she—she! Kaya was young, fair, her face was like a flower; her hair was like gold; her lips were parted, arched and sweet; her eyes. You, you are not Kaya!—Never."

His voice was angry and full of scorn: "It was all a dream, a mistake. Go—out of my sight; begone! I'll have nothing to do with anarchists."

He snatched the violets from the table and flung them on the hearth: "Begone or I'll call the police." He was in a tempest of rage. His disappointment rose in his throat and choked him.

The old woman shrank back from him step by step. He followed threateningly: "Begone, you beggar."

His heart beat unpleasantly. Devil take the old woman: Impostor! She was old and ugly as sin. He was sleepy and weary. Why had he taken the violets; why had he read the note? If the girl were not Kaya, then who—who?

"Come," he cried sharply, "Be off!"

Suddenly the woman buried her head in her hands. She began to sob in long drawn breaths; they shook her form. She fell back against the Erard, trembling and sobbing.

Velasco stared down at her. His anger left him like a flash and his heart softened. Poor thing, poor creature! She was old and feeble, and crippled. He had forgotten. He had only thought of her, Kaya, the girl with the flower-like face. He shook himself, as if out of a dream, and his hand patted the woman's shoulder soothingly. His voice lost its sharpness.

"Don't," he said, "Don't cry like that, my dear Madame—no, don't! It will be all right. I was hasty. Do not mind what I said,—don't—no!"

She dashed his hand from her shoulder and broke into passionate weeping. "You play like a god," she cried, "but you are not; you are a brute. You have no heart. It is your violin that has the heart. Don't touch me—let me go! It was so little I asked, so little!"

She struggled away from him, but Velasco pursued her. His heart misgave him. He grasped her cloak with one hand the hood with the other, trying to raise it:

"Stop!" he said, "I can't stand a woman crying, young or old. I can't stand it; it makes me sick. Stop, I tell you! I'll do anything. I'll—I'll marry you—You shall go to Germany with me. Only stop for heaven's sake. Don't cry like that—don't!"

He stooped over the shrinking figure still lower; his arm pressed her shoulder. She struggled with him blindly, still sobbing.

"Now, by heaven," cried Velasco. "If you are to be my wife, I'll see your face at least. Be still, Madame, be still!"

The woman cowered away from him holding out her hands, pressing him back. "I beg of you—I beseech you" she said. "Not my face! No—no, Monsieur!"

She gazed at him in terror, and as she gazed, the hood slipped back from her hair; it fell in a golden flood to her shoulders, curling in little rings and waves about her forehead, her neck; veiling her face. She gave a cry.

Velasco stood for a moment petrified, staring down into the frightened eyes that were like twin wells of blue fixed on his own. Then he leaped forward, snatched at the cloak, flung out his arms,—he had clasped the air. She was gone. The door slammed back in his face and the sound of her hurrying footsteps, light as a bird's, fled in the distance. He was all alone in the room.

Velasco rubbed his eyes with his hand and stared about him, strangely, mechanically, like a sleep-walker. "What a dream! Ye gods, what a dream!" He stretched his limbs yawning and laughed aloud; then he paled suddenly. Was it a dream; or no—impossible. On the sleeve of his black velvet jacket something glistened and sparkled, a thread as of gold, fine and slender like silk, invisible almost as the fibrous strings of his bow.

He raised it between his fingers. Then slowly, heavily, he went back to his seat before the fire-place and flung himself down.

The lamp-light fell on the Persian rug dimly, flickeringly, the colours were soft as an ancient fresco; the jewels were gone, and the coals burned lower, dying. He lit a cigarette and began to smoke. The violin was in his arms. He played low to himself, dreamily, fitfully, his eyes half closed, dark slits beneath the brows.

At his feet lay the violets crushed and strewn; a twist of paper creased, blotted.

The light of the lamp grew dimmer. The malachite clock struck again and again. The night passed.

In Search Of Beauty

You Must First Win Health by Getting the Blood Rich and Red

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Every man and every woman has an individual idea of what constitutes beauty.

Is beauty skin deep or does it depend on the glow which health alone can give? Is it due to regularity of feature or to the gracefulness and elasticity which accompany health and vigour?

To win beauty you must first gain health. Rich, red blood is the secret. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is successful and popular because it forms rich, red blood and in this way gives gracefulness to every movement and a healthful, natural glow to the complexion.

Thin blood and weak nerves soon give one a tired, worn out appearance. Worry and anxiety show themselves in wrinkles and care lines. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food enriches the blood, restores vigour to the nerves and drives away headaches and bodily pains.

By filling the arteries with new, red blood, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food rounds out the form to healthful proportions, makes the muscles and tissues firm and strong and gives vivacity to mind and body.

PLACE THE NOOSE ON THEMSELVES

Most Murderers Are Careless as to Some Detail or Other—Clues That Led to Identity

"Four murderers out of five place the noose round their own necks," was the startling statement made by a Scotland Yard official. "No matter how clever the criminal is he is almost certain to do some stupid thing, or to omit taking some elementary precaution, which is his undoing; and the cleverer he is—as was proved in Crippen's case—the more and bigger blunders he often makes.

"And it has always been so. I could give you scores of cases in which a murderer, however, cautiously and cleverly he has planned his crime, has by a single foolish act played straight into the hands of justice.

"Foucet, the notorious French murderer, was a very clever man; but he was mad enough to be seen driving with his victim on the very day of the crime, and the same evening hawked his watch about at a public ball. Edison, the Bodmin murderer, went straight from the scene of his crime to have his hair cut. The barber noticed that, while his beard was brown, his hair was quite grey. The murdered woman was found to have a handful of brown hair in one hand and of grey in the other.

"Jarvot, a notorious French murderer, after killing and robbing a man and his wife, went straight to the savings bank in his native town, where he was known as a pauper, to lodge the exact sum his victims were known to have saved. A man called Wolff, who murdered his master, appeared immediately afterwards actually wearing a well-known suit of his victim; and Troppmann, who killed an entire family, would not even have been suspected had he not in his vanity described with such minute knowledge how the man he accused had probably done the deed that he was himself arrested on suspicion and forced to confess that he was the murderer!

"In our own country it has nearly always been the same. The Muswell Hill murderers were brought to the gallows by a toy lantern they had carelessly left behind them at the scene of the crime, and which was identified as his own property by the young brother-in-law of Milsom, one of the murderers. Mrs. Dyer, the notorious baby-murderer, was undone by an envelope which formed part of the packing of one of her victims' bodies; and Hudson, the wife-murderer, might have gone scot-free if he had not placed a sheet of blank paper in an envelope and addressed it to himself under one of the pseudonyms, with the object of throwing the police off the scent.

"James Canham Read would have proved an alibi, and thus escaped the gallows, if he had not stupidly sent a telegram which conclusively disproved this defence; and when Franz Muller murdered Mr. Briggs on the North London Railway a good many years ago he was fool enough to leave in the railway carriage his straw hat, which easily led to his identification.

"Even excess of care often proves as fatal as such acts of carelessness. Thus, one murderer, after cutting his victim's throat, arranged everything so as to point conclusively to a case of suicide—with one exception. He hid the fatal knife, a precaution which no suicide, for obvious reasons, takes. Several murderers with a similar object have placed knife or revolver in the victim's hand, where it has been found loosely held. After a suicide the weapon is always clutched tightly.

"Wainwright thought he had effectually destroyed all trace of his victim when he buried her remains in chloride of lime. Chloride of lime, however, instead of destroying, preserves; and the body was found in an excellent state of preservation."

PREHISTORIC MONSTERS

Some Interesting Information About Galapagos Islands

The Galapagos Islands, which the United States is leasing from Ecuador for ninety-nine years for $35,000,000, are of extreme interest to naturalists, since they form a connecting link between the animal life of the twentieth century and remote prehistoric times.

Here, and here only, are to be found the giant tortoises, survivors of the reptilian age, when there were as yet no mammals, and all sorts of huge reptiles held sway upon the earth.

The islands lie in the Pacific Ocean some 730 miles west of the coast of Ecuador, and are so inaccessible, rugged, and mountainous, that they were until quite recently very little visited and comparatively unknown. It is owing to this fact, no doubt, that these monster tortoises have survived there, although they and all their relations became extinct everywhere else in the world probably thousands of years ago.

Some of these reptiles weigh nearly a quarter of a ton, and they are remarkably long-lived, many of them being three and four hundred years old.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills positively cure Constipation and all kindred & resulting troubles. 25¢ a box 1c

They are, however, almost extinct in their wild state, owing to their having of late years been so persistently hunted for natural history collections.

The last great haul was made in 1898, when an expedition organised by the Hon. Walter Rothschild, visited the islands and brought away sixty tortoises of ages varying between 100 and 400 years.

Since then there have been other minor raids made upon them, and it is estimated that there are probably not now more than about a score of the giants left on the islands.

BOGUS BARONETS

They Will Likely Be on Hand During the Coronation Festivities.

Titled impostors will be more numerous than ever this season on account of the drawing power of the Coronation.

Owing to the consequent rush of social festivities a few title holders whose names are unknown to busy hostesses will give rise to no suspicions. Suave rascals with unimpeachable manners will undoubtedly have their chance during that time. With the help of their bogus distinctions, these adventurers, who look upon wealthy travelers as their natural prey, go about their nefarious business with a tactful cunning and a calm effrontery that almost defies detection.

Knowing the game, they avoid taking any title higher than the baronetcy, an order most open to abuse, for there are over one thousand genuine baronets besides the premier baronet, Sir Hickman Beckett Bacon, whose title dates back to 1611.

In order to prevent the false assumption of a baronet's title when it lapses by the death of its holder, a royal warrant was issued by the King in February, 1910, stating that an official roll of baronets must be prepared by the Home Office ,and that when a baronet dies his successor must prove his right to the baronetcy.

Within recent years the daughters of many well known Americans have assumed the titles conferred upon them by marrying into the baronetcy.

Baronets do not sit as hereditary legislators in the House of Lords, neither are they officially represented at the coronation of an English Sovereign. But the tercentenary of the institution of this order falls this year, and prominent baronets will undoubtedly take steps to advertise the dignity of their rank, and to render it less liable to abuse. The police court magistrates are sure to have to deal with a few of the less expert masqueraders in borrowed plumes.

MUSIC FOR CORONATION

How Choir will be Made up—Anthems for Occasion.

Gratifying progress is reported in the preparation of the musical ritual of the Coronation service. The programme will follow closely that at the Coronation of Edward VII., with a few notable additions. There will be a larger choir and also a larger band than at the Coronation of the late King. The singers will number almost five hundred, and the instrumentalists probably one hundred.

The nucleus of the choir will naturally be the Westminster Abbey singers, who will be reinforced by the choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral, the Chapel Royal, St. George's Chapel at Windsor, and drafts from the choirs of Rochester Cathedral, and other sources in the Provinces. The orchestra in which the trumpeters will have a conspicuous part, will be made up of musicians from the King's Private Band, the orchestra of the Royal Choral Society, and the Kneller Hall School of Military Music.

The chief features of the musical ritual will be the anthems specially composed for the occasion by Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Walter Parratt, and Sir George Martin, the three greatest organists of England. Sir Frederick Bridge probably will be selected to compose the anthem which will signalize the entrance of the royal party into Westminster Abbey. This recalls an interesting and time-honored custom. Midway in the anthem a break will be made, so that the boys of Westminster School may exercise their ancient privilege of greeting their Majesties by shouting "Vivat Regina Maria," "Vivat Rex Georgius."

Stomach Blood and Liver Troubles

Much sickness starts with weak stomach, and consequent poor, impoverished blood. Nervous and pale people look good, rich, red blood. Their stomachs need invigorating for, after all, a man can be no stronger than his stomach.

A remedy that makes the stomach strong and the liver active, makes rich red blood and overcomes and drives out disease-producing bacteria and cures a whole multitude of diseases.

Get rid of your Stomach Weakness and Liver Laziness by taking a course of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—the great Stomach Restorative, Liver Invigorator and Blood Cleanser.

You can't afford to accept any medicine of unknown composition as a substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery," which is a medicine of known composition, having a complete list of ingredients in plain English on its bottle-wrapper, same being attested as correct under oath.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate Stomach, Liver and Bowels.

TRAGIC STORY OF POOR TICHIT

Unable to Earn an Adequate Livelihood he Threw Himself into the River Seine

The old story of "Hop-o'-My-Thumb" has been repeated under modern conditions in Paris. A few days ago, five little boys, the oldest of them seven and the youngest of them two years old, walked hand in hand about the great hall of the General Post Office in the Rue de Louvre in Paris asking for their father. "Father," the oldest said, "is a postman. He brought us here this morning, left us, saying that he would be back soon, and now the lights are lit father has not returned, and we are hungry." The five children were taken to an office and a meal was given them. The police immediately started a search for the father, and, after a few days, they found him. His name is Tichit, and the story carries its moral with it. Tichit was brought up in a monastic brotherhood, became a novice, but did not become a monk. He left the brotherhood, married, and had five children. To support them and his wife he became a postman in the little town of Sucy-en-Brie, where the cheese comes from, and for some time all went well with him and his little family. But one day the deputy of the district discovered that Tichit was a criminal. He had not stolen, he had not neglected to work, his letters were delivered punctually, and on this head there was no word to be said against him. But Tichit was a criminal for all that. He had committed an unforgivable crime against Socialistic France.

In the evenings he had augmented his slender income by giving private lessons to children in the neighborhood. For a State-employed man to disregard Socialist tyranny and the syndical rights of schoolmasters and to give private lessons is simply anathema.

The Mayor sent for Tichit, and accused him of the crime. The postmaster answered that he had a wife and five children. He was told that he must either give up his postman's work or promise not to teach in future. He gave up the teaching, and a few weeks later he was sent in disgrace to a smaller town—a little place called Boynes in the Seine-et-Oise Department.

It is difficult to keep a wife and five growing boys on an income of less than $200 a year, and he did not keep his wife very long. Mme. Tichit fell ill and died, and the widower's situation became more impossible than ever. He was at his wits' end. He and his boys had lived on next to nothing for a week. There was no money in the house, and the postman could see no way of getting any if he continued to be honest.

So he put honesty aside, slipped into the train for Paris, with his five small boys, managed to evade the ticket collectors, and arriving in Paris, wandered out into the streets, the children trotting after him. For two days the six of them lived on the garments Tichit sold one by one, but he could find no employment and no place in which to live in Paris owing to the little children and his poverty.

Then a few days ago, Tichit, with his five children, went to see M. Puech, who was the responsible Minister for the postal department. Poor Tichit had no half-pence to spend on newspapers. He did not know that there was a ministerial crisis in France, and that Monsieur le Ministre was likely to be busy with his own affairs. He went to the Ministry was sent from room to room and door to door, and finally left in despair and hungrier than ever.

At first he tried to beg, but this revolted him. Unfortunately for his case, so many beggars by profession tell the only story that he had to tell—"No bread to eat, and five motherless boys"—that people proved hard hearted. And it was then that Tichit, sitting on a stone bench by the Seine, remembered the tale of "Hop-o'-My-Thumb." He varied it a little. He dragged his weary feet and his five boys down to the Rue du Louvre, and lost them in the great hall of the General Post Office instead of in a forest. And some days later the police found Tichit. He is not to be punished by the courts for his desertion of his children, for it was in the River Seine they found him.

CORONATION TRICKS

Absurd Frauds that are Being Practised on the People.

Already many persons have hit upon a variety of tricks and devices for turning the Coronation to account for their personal profit.

One of the most impudent of these tricks is a device adopted by some shopkeepers of selling brooches, satins, lace, and embroideries as remnants of the materials from which the Coronation robes are being made. By making this absurd claim for their goods, shopkeepers, especially in country districts, have been able to trick a number of unwary people into paying for ordinary stuffs and materials considerably above the normal prices. As a matter of fact, not an inch of the stuff from which the King's or Queen's Coronation robes are made will ever be put on the market, for only sufficient will be manufactured to make the robes.

One enterprising manufacturer has put a specially cheap silk on the market which he calls "Coronation silk," and in several towns in the North the material has achieved quite a boom and is selling in enormous quantities; of course, the silk has no more real connection with the Coronation than last year's snow, nor, indeed, does the manufacturer or retailer of the silk actually say that it has, but the fact remains that numbers of people are buying it as a result of a clever title!

Several downright swindles are being carried on by the more daringly dishonest "Coronation" exploiters. For example, a smartly dressed, handsome, well-mannered young lady has been collecting funds in North London on behalf of public institutions, stating that the money was to purchase a gift which the institutions in question intended to present to their Majesties on the occasion of the Coronation. The young lady has disappeared recently, and the institutions she pretended to represent, have now for the first time heard of her and the Coronation gift from the people who subscribed to it.

There are also bogus Coronation seat syndicates and their agents.

Before the last Coronation, numbers of simple-minded people were induced to pay for seats by persons who called at their houses with tickets. The holders of these tickets, it is scarcely necessary to say, did not find any seats awaiting them.

Sometimes the man who calls with tickets may be very smartly dressed and represent himself as an agent of a large syndicate which has bought up so many seats that they are in a position to offer them at very low prices. But, however, the device is worked, the results, so far as the purchaser of the faked tickets for seats is concerned, is the same—he is simply swindled out of his money.

The Coronation year is, of course, being actively exploited by vendors of cheap goods. All sorts of cheap china and metal ornaments are being put on the market in huge quantities, bearing pictures of their Majesties and this year's date. These goods are sometimes being sold at quite a hundred per cent. above the prices normally obtained for them, though the crude figures of the King and Queen which they bear do not increase the cost of their production one fraction of a penny.

It may be noted that a number of people buy these cheap Coronation souvenirs under the foolish impression that they will become much more valuable later. They are produced in such numbers that it is inconceivable that they will ever be valuable to collectors.

MOVING PICTURES

Of Coronation and Phonograph Records of King's Address.

Moving pictures in colors of the forthcoming Coronation processions and festivities are to be taken. This was impossible when King Edward was crowned, for cinematography in colors had not then been invented.

It is possible that the actual ceremony of the Coronation inside Westminster Abbey will be reproduced in the same manner if the difficulties in the way of light can be overcome.

Another modern invention that will probably be called into use in connection with the ceremony is the gramophone. Experiments are now being conducted in private by the King with different types of talking machines, and if these are satisfactory a "record" of his Majesty's Coronation address will be taken, and reproductions of it sent to all Colonial Parliaments and municipal bodies throughout the Empire.

In this way millions of his subjects will be able to listen to King George's actual words with their own ears, while gazing with their own eyes upon the historical and impressive ceremony, reproduced in all its gorgeousness of coloring and wealth of detail, and instinct, too, with life and movement.

Yet another marvel of modern science, wireless telegraphy, will be used to convey the news of the great event of the year to such ships as are fitted with the necessary apparatus. This again, was out of the question at King Edward's Coronation, for although Marconi had even then shown as something of its immense possibilities ,wireless telegraphy was still in its infancy ,and not a single ocean-going steamer had an installation on board.

THE CURSE OF THE NATION IS CONSTIPATION

"Fruit-a-tives" Alone Cures This Disease

A famous scientist states that Constipation, or non-action of the bowels, causes more deaths than all other diseases combined. Constipation inflames the Kidneys, ruins digestion, is the foundation of Rheumatism, poisons the blood, causes Headaches, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Insomnia.

Constipation is caused by a weak or sluggish liver. Bile, the only purgative of the body, is secreted by the liver, which in turn should pour out into the intestines sufficient bile to move the bowels. Unless the liver is active, there cannot be enough bile to move the bowels regularly, and Constipation is the result.

"Fruit-a-tives", the famous fruit medicine, will always cure Constipation because it acts directly on the liver—relieves the congestion—increases the quantity of bile—and strengthens the bowel muscles.

TEMPLE BAR

Interesting History of A Structure Which Was Shifted From Fleet Street

There is some talk about bringing Temple Bar back to London. It was removed from Fleet Street rather more than thirty years ago, and re-erected at Theobald's Park, the residence of the late Lady Meux. The old city gateway was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren in 1670-2, after the fire. Its predecessor was "a house of timber, erected across the street, with a narrow gateway and an entry on the south side of it under the house." That structure had stood for two and a half centuries before Wren put up the stone gate known to our day. It stood, of course, at the city boundary, which, before the "house of timber" was built, was marked by posts, rails and chains. Temple Bar had to go because it was an obstruction. It has had an interesting history, though, as was said about it, it "represents little else but a gibbet." It has been suggested that it should be brought back to London and re-erected at the south end of Middle Temple Lane.

MUST PUT DOWN CRIME WITH AN IRON HAND

More Sympathy is Expressed Towards the Criminal Than Any Previous Generation Has Shown

That compassion for the criminal is a main cause of the growth of crime in the last ten years, is stated in a remarkable preface to the Blue Book on Judicial Statistics issued by the Home Office. This preface is written by Mr. M. B. Simpson, C.B., of the Home Office, but Sir Edward Troup, the Permanent Under-Secretary, explains that the suggestions which Mr. Simpson puts forward must be taken not as the official views of the Department but as conclusions to which he personally has been led after long experience and close study of criminal questions.

Increase in Crime

In 1909 the number of persons tried for indictable offences was 67,149, considerably larger than in any year except 1908, when it was 68,116. The increase is not accounted for by trade depression. Indeed, owing to reluctance to prosecute for small offences it is probably much greater than the mere figures show. Nor is it due to an increase of habitual criminals. In short, criminality has been more prevalent in the community. Why? The report says: No intelligent person can have failed to notice the marked growth since 1898 of a strong sentiment of compassion for the criminal. Mitigations of prison discipline, the Probation of Offenders Act, and the establishment of the Borstel system have been the outcome of this sentiment. These, it may with considerable confidence be hoped, will in the long run help to diminish the total amount of crime. The main object of the amendments which have been effected during the last ten years in our penal system has been to facilitate an offender's return to the path of honesty and to make the punishment imposed on him an aid rather than a hindrance in his way. But public sentiment, or, at any rate, the sentiment that finds public expression, has gone far beyond this.

In the magazines and newspapers, that are ordinarily regarded as reflecting public opinion, articles on crime and punishment are commoner than they were, and the sentiment that is expressed towards the criminal is almost universally compassionate and often sympathetic to an extent that no previous generation has shown. From some of the expressions used it might almost seem that the reading public is on the side of the criminal as against the law. Tales that would be unhesitatingly rejected if they were told by a beggar in the street appear, when urged from the dock as an excuse for theft, to be received with much readier credulity.

Influence of Public Opinion

Now of all influences for the repression of crime the most potent is exercised not by the courts, nor the police, nor the prison authorities; but by public opinion, the community that no longer resented crime and had learned to feel nothing but compassion for the criminal would in time inevitably find itself faced by a flood of criminality against which police and prison authorities would struggle in vain. And though we are far at present from any such catastrophe, it is permissible to suggest that the steady increase of crime during the last ten years, is largely due to a general relaxation in public sentiment with regard to it.

"Crime is sometimes spoken of as if it were the outcome of a revolt of the poor against the rich; and the feeling of dissatisfaction with the inequalities of our existing social system at the present time is so deep and so general that anyone professing to take part in such a revolt may count on securing a good deal of public sympathy. The Press does much to encourage this view of crime. The public is told much about the high-class burglary carried out with the latest appliances that science can suggest, the "Daring Robbery at a Country House," or the ingenious fraud on a bank, while it takes little or no notice of the hosts of humbler thieves who would be as incapable of crimes like these as they would be of the feats of a Turpin or a Claude Duval. Fiction, too, plays its part by beguiling the lieges with fantastic pictures of a Raffles or an Arsene Lupin, and the modern criminal is too often vested with some of the romance that with more reason belonged to the highway man of old.

The Average Thief

But the average thief is not very different from the rest of the world except, perhaps, in having less moral principle than others, and none of that terror of prison which marks the criminal of fiction, finding crime "an easier means of living than any other." Such a belief will certainly be confirmed if he is encouraged to regard himself as the victim rather than the enemy of society. Such a pose is growing much commoner than it was among convicted criminals.

The report then shows that the real victims of the majority of thieves are the poorer classes, not the rich. Crime on a large scale is possible only for the few, while the vast majority must adopt as their motto, "Small profits and quick returns." The propertied classes can fairly well protect themselves against all but the more enterprising criminals. If the comparative defencelessness of the poor against the professional thieves and swindlers were more fully realised by the public, it is possible that there would be less sympathy with the convicted criminal and consequently less crime.

USE THE BOYCOTT IN THEIR CAUSE

The Latest Method of the Suffragettes in England Explained by Mrs. Despard

A boycott of the census is to be the latest method of the militant suffragists for calling attention to their claims to the vote. The announcement was made by Mrs. Despard at a meeting of the Women's Freedom League, held in the Caxton Hall, London. The census would cost a great deal of money, said Mrs. Despard, and involve an enormous amount of labor. So far as they were concerned, this census should not be taken. "We shall prove," said Mrs. Despard, "whether there is a people, or whether there can be a people, without the women. We shall call upon women householders and women lodgers all over the country to refuse absolutely all information when the census takers come round."

"Women," she went on, "had been proud to belong to the nation, but they had been denied their citizenship. Was it not logical, therefore, that they should say, 'Very well; citizens we are not, and we shall not register ourselves as citizens?' That was logical, as a protest should be, and it would be effective." Speaking of the preparations for the census, Mrs. Despard asserted that the officials were trying to get cheap labor; little girls from the schools at six and seven shillings a week. Mrs. Despard added that they would stop the census boycott only when they had the promise of the Prime Minister that a Women's Suffrage Bill would be introduced this session. Tax resistance is to be another method of obstruction, and Mrs. Despard, who has already been "sold up" twice for refusing to pay taxes, produced a third summons to which she intimated that she would pay no attention.

THE GALLANT PLAYWRIGHT

A pretty story of Miss Ellen Terry and a gallant young playwright has gone the rounds of the Players' Club. Miss Terry attended in New York the first night of this playwright's latest work, and at the end of the third act he was presented to her. She congratulated him warmly. "It is very good," she said. "Your play is very good indeed, and I shall send all my American friends to see it." "In that case," said the playwright, with a very low and courtly bow, "my little piece will sell 90,000,000 tickets."

THE DUCHESS OF NORFOLK

One of the great ladies of England, who has resumed her place in the exclusive social circles since King George's accession to the throne. During the reign of King Edward a number of these old families held aloof from the smart set on account of the large foreign element that went to make it up. The Duchess of Norfolk, Newcastle, Buccleugh, and Wellington are a few of those who have flung open their doors and will entertain on a magnificent scale during the coming season.

SAYS FARMS DO NOT WEAR OUT

American Writer Advises Man Who Wants More Results to Sharpen Cultivator and Use Muscle

If any man thinks his farm is worn out, let him swap his team that weighs eight hundred each for one that weighs fourteen hundred each and plow his land two or three inches deeper than it has ever been plowed, get his cultivator sharpened, and start with the idea that the soil is thirty-five feet deep and that the land in New York State has been cropped for one hundred years and is not worn out yet, so writes a New York farming editor. There is land in the town of Paris that will produce more now than it would fifty years ago and could be made to double what it now yields.

I dug a well on my farm, says the writing farmer, that was thirty-five feet deep, and some of the soil that I took out of the bottom raised the longest herdsgrass heads that I ever saw. I feel sorry for some of these old, worn-out farmers that have farmed all their lives and have reduced their muscle and courage so much, and who hold forth such an idea of "worn out" land to the young farmer. Young men want all the courage they can get. If a young man buys a farm and is told it is half worn out and is given the idea that in a few years it will be all worn out, what courage can he have in working the farm at all. A boy that is brought up on a farm has a good muscle, good health, and is generally fitted for a long life. There is no one more independent than a farmer, and there never has been a better time for a young man to buy a farm and pay for it than there has been during the last five years. If they are putting it off for better times I think it is a mistake. They give you a farm if you will pay them two-thirds of what the building cost, and good land at that.

Young man, jump in, do not be afraid that the land is worn out. That idea was started by a man that has the blues. Strawberries are 98 per cent. water, so that the 95 per cent of the two per cent. would be a small tax on the land.

I do not suppose there is any nourishment in land plaster, but I have seen marked effects from its use on grass and other crops in dry weather. I always put it on potatoes when I planted them. It retains moisture and draws nourishment from the atmosphere. No doubt there are some phosphates that supply the soil with some quality that it lacks and brings good results, but if I was paying for a farm I would save the phosphate money to pay my interest and take my chances on good cultivation.

I would advise all young men who intend to farm it to remember that the two words "good cultivation" are the most important words to the young farmer. Young man, why not start in and go to farming and take in this 99 per cent. of the crop that is floating in the air? It is easy to catch; a good well-tilled farm is the best trap in the world. A fine, well-tilled soil is drinking it in when you are in bed and asleep. Poor Richard said that God helped those who helped themselves.

SETTLERS AND GAME

Important Decision by Judge Hewson Manitoulin Island

A decision of very considerable importance to the residents of Northern and North-Western Ontario has been given by Judge Hewson, of Manitoulin Island. A settler named John Kinney was fined by the magistrate $20 and costs for hunting during open season without a license. He appealed and the judge quashed the conviction.

In the course of his judgement Judge Hewson recites the particulars of the case. The defendant went to the unorganised district of Manitoulin in 1876 and settled upon land in the township of Gordon as a farmer. While still working his farm he went to reside at Gore Bay and became clerk of the municipality. The Judge held that, although Gore Bay was established as a town with municipal institutions by a special act of Legislature, the defendant was still a settler.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, April 18.—Receipts of live stock at the City Yards were 48 carloads, consisting of 894 cattle, 1031 hogs, 715 sheep and lambs, 286 calves and 20 horses.

Exporters.

There were 18 cattle of export quality sold, as follows: Two at $6.10, ten at $6, and four at $5.85, all of which were bought for local killing.

Butchers.

George Rowntree bought for the Harris Abattoir Company four loads of cattle, as follows: Two extra choice steers, fed by Schofield Cook of Concord, Ont., 1,320 lbs. each, brought on the market by J. Walker of Teston, at $6.10 per cwt.; butchers' steers and heifers, $5.40 to $5.65; cows, $3.75 to $5.05; bulls, $4.50 to $5.

Milkers and Springers.

There were a few good to choice milkers and springers—more than usual for some time past—and prices ranged at from $40 to $70 each, some six or seven cows selling at the latter price.

Veal Calves.

About 300 veal calves were received, of which 250 were bought by Wesley Dunn, who reported prices as ranging from $5.50 to $7 per cwt., or an average of $6 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Canadian lambs have been more plentiful all last fall and winter than for several seasons—so plentiful that they have sold at from $1 to $. per cwt. lower than a year ago. But it was only three weeks ago that $8 per cwt. was offered for a deck of choice Canadian lambs; but since that time about 3000 American lambs have been thrown on the Toronto markets, which are selling at $6.50 to $7 per cwt., according to quality, after paying a duty of 2½ per cent. on the value of the shipment. This has caused Canadian lamb prices to decline from $1 to $1.50 per cwt.

Sheep, ewes, sold at $4.50 to $5; rams, $4 to $4.50; yearling lambs, $6 to $6.50; spring lambs, $8 to $8 each.

Hogs.

Mr. Harris reported selects, fed and watered, at $9.50, and $9.25 to drovers for hogs f.o.b. cars at country points. Hogs over 200 lbs., 50c per cwt. less than the above prices.

New York Live Stock.

The Company has no bonds, and there is no mortgage upon its real estate.

The formal prospectus in connection with this issue is on file with the Provincial Secretary.

Russell Motor Car Company, Limited, is the new name of the company heretofore known as "Canada Cycle & Motor Company, Limited." When the company applied for supplementary letters patent authorizing the present issue of preference stock, it was deemed wise to change the name, for three reasons, viz., that its motor business has been for some time its largest business, that the word "Russell" has become thoroughly identified with the company's motor cars, and that the new name is shorter than the old.

The high class character of the cars manufactured during the last three years is thoroughly established, while exclusive rights for use and manufacture in Canada of the Knight Motor gives the company a commanding position in the market, and, with other important features, we believe, puts the company's higher priced cars on a par with those of the world's best makers.

For the year ending July 31st, 1909, the company showed a clear profit, after payment of interest on all indebtedness, of $30,191.14. That year saw the company well started in prosperous business, and the net profits for the next year, ending July 31st, 1910, were $141,350.98, or 18 per cent. upon the stock. The letter of Mr. Russell, General Manager, which follows, indicates the net earnings for the current year, ending July 31st next (after paying interest on bank advances and other charges) as at least $175,000. This means a minimum earning for the current year of over 21% upon the common stock.

We believe that the company is particularly well managed and organized. Mr. T. A. Russell, who has been General Manager for nine years, has engaged with the Directors to remain in that capacity for a further period of three years, and insurance for $100,000 in favor of the company has been placed upon his life. It is expected that Mr. Russell will remain in charge of the company's business after completion of this special three-year period.

In pursuance of our general policy, where we make public offerings of blocks of securities, provision has been made for a representative of this firm on the Board of Directors, and Mr. J. W. McConnell, of Montreal, and Mr. Lloyd Harris, M.P., of Brantford, are also joining the business as Directors.

The placing of the $800,000 of preference stock has put the company in a strong position financially.

In View of the foregoing, we recommend that the purchase of these shares, which, in addition to furnishing an avenue for investment with a high degree of safety, have the attractive and substantial advantage of being exchangeable at any time share for share, for common stock. The relation of surplus assets to capitalization is unusually strong.

7 AND 9 KING STREET EAST, TORONTO

RUSSELL MOTOR CAR COMPANY, LIMITED

Our financial year ends on July 31st, and it is generally difficult to furnish an estimate of results at this season of the year, because the first eight months are largely employed in manufacturing goods which are sold and delivered during the last four months. This year, however, it is possible to forecast results for the remaining four months' business with more confidence than usual, because the business has followed closely the lines of last year, except that it shows a substantial increase in volume in almost every department.

Up to the end of March last our sales were $821,143, as compared with $715,866, for the same period in the previous year, being a gain of about 15 per cent. There is every prospect that this rate of increase will at least hold during the remaining months, and I expect that our total output for the year will exceed $2,000,000, as compared with $1,698,009 last year.

The bicycle business during the last two years has shown some genuine improvement, and we expect a healthy increase in this department. The same remarks apply to the bicycle accessory and parts business, and to the motor accessory and parts business. With the view of holding the very substantial good will we have in the bicycle and bicycle accessory business, the Directors have decided to continue handling that business under the old name, "Canada Cycle & Motor Co., Limited," as a separate department.

The motor car business is more promising than at any previous period in our experience. I believe the expansion in Canada of the motor car business will be still greater than it has been, because, up to the present, we have scarcely kept pace in this country with the development in motor car business that has taken place abroad. This company's control of the rights for Canada of the Knight Motor is, I believe, a most substantial asset, the value of which cannot easily be exaggerated.

We have just completed an addition to our factory which greatly increases our manufacturing facilities.

I feel safe in expressing the belief that our profits for the current year, after paying interest on bank advances and other charges, will be in excess of $175,000. If that expectation is realized we will, at the close of the present year, have surplus assets, at a conservative valuation, in excess of liabilities to an amount exceeding by some $40,000 the total of both the Preference and common Stock, or for more than double the Preference Stock. This is without taking into account patents, trade-marks and good-will, which are nevertheless valuable assets.

SNAPPING A LYNX.

Ernest Thompson-Seton Tells of an Adventure With a Camera.

The camera is gradually replacing the rifle as a weapon for sportsmen. It does not beg the dead carcasses of beasts, but it secures what is more valuable, a record of their appearance and habits in the living state. The very act of making the photographic "shot" also discovers traits in the wild subject that a powder-and-ball hunter would never suspect. Ernest Thompson-Seton tells in Scribner's of a surprising revelation concerning the lynx. One of these supposedly savage animals had been driven from cover and cornered by Seton and two Indians.

He faced about at bay, says the writer, growling savagely, thumping his little bobtail from side to side and pretending he was going to spring on us. I took photograph number two at twenty-five yards. He certainly did look fierce, but I thought I knew the creature as well as the men who were backing up. I retired, put a new film in place and said:

"Now, Preble, I'm going to walk up to that lynx, and get a close photo. If he jumps for me, and he may, there is nothing can save my beauty but you and that gun."

Preble, with characteristic loquacity, said, "Go ahead."

Then I stopped and began slowly approaching the desperate creature we held at bay. His eyes were glaring green, his ears were back, his small bobtail kept twitching from side to side and his growls grew harder and thicker as I neared him. At fifteen feet he gathered his legs under him as for a spring, and I pressed the button, getting number three.

Then did the demon of ambition enter into my heart, and lead me into peril. The lynx at bay was starving and desperate. He might spring at me, but I believed that if he did he would never reach me alive. I knew my man—this nerved me—and I said to him, "I'm not satisfied; I want him to fill the finder. Are you ready?"

"Yep."

So I crouched lower and came still nearer and at twelve feet made number four. For some strange reason, now, the lynx seemed less angry than he had been.

"He didn't fill the finder. I'll try again," was my next. Then, on my knees, I crawled up, watching the finder until it was full of lynx. I glanced at the beast; he was but eight feet away. I focused and fired.

And now, oh, wonder! that lynx no longer seemed annoyed; he had ceased all growling and simply looked bored.

We stood aside; he saw his chance and dashed for the tall timber. As he went I fired the last film, getting number six, and so far as I knew that lynx is alive, and well, and going yet.

A Great Geographer.

In an article under this title, in The Geographical Journal, Mr. J. B. Tyrrell gives an outline of the work of an explorer of the old type. David Thompson was born in London, England, in 1770, of Welsh parentage. When seven years old he was placed in the Grey Coat School, a London charity institution which is still in existence. He studied here for seven years, learning the rudiments of navigation, which later in life became useful to him. In 1783 the Hudson Bay Co. applied "to know if this charity could furnish them with four boys against the month of May next for their settlements in America." Thompson was the only boy available, and was apprenticed to the company for seven years, and was sent to Fort Churchill.

Thompson spent fourteen years with the "ancient and honorable" company, and during these two terms of service he surveyed most of the rivers tributary to Hudson Bay from the south and west, going as far as the east end of Lake Athabasca.

In 1797-8 he made a long journey through all the principal water courses of the northwest.

His last years were spent either in Glengarry County, Ontario, or in Longueil, opposite Montreal, where he died on Feb. 10, 1857, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven years. His wife, a child of the western country, whom he married at Isle a la Crosse, on the Churchill River, survived him by less than three months, dying on May 7 of the same year.

Canada's Boundary.

While the boundary between the United States and Canada follows for many hundreds of miles the River St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes, there is a vast distance of prairie land beyond with no natural demarcation. This is marked with pillars of iron and wood placed one mile apart. These are supplied alternately by the Canadian and the United States Governments, and run from Lake of the Woods to the Red River Valley. Beyond mounds of earth and cairns of stone are used as marks. The pillars are hollow castings, eight inches square at the base, four at the top. Inside are well-seasoned cedar posts. Each pillar is inscribed in raised letters on the north, "Convention of London"; on the south, "Oct. 20, 1818." The stone cairns are seven feet high, eight feet at the base and shaped like a pyramid. Earth is used where stone is not available.

May Meet In Stratford.

London, April 19.—The Synod of Huron, which opens this year on June 13, it is likely, will convene in Stratford instead of London. For years the gathering has been held here, but the bishop has the power both to change the time and the place of meeting, and owing to the fact that the general synod is to be held here in September, he has considered it wise to move the gathering of the diocese to Stratford, if the residents of that place can arrange to billet the clerical delegates.

Cut Off One Licence.

Brockville, April 19.—The Board of License Commissioners for this district have granted a renewal of licenses to six hotels and two shops in Brockville, and four hotels in the townships of Kitley and South Elmsley. This is a reduction of one hotel license from last year, caused by the adoption of local option in the township of Elizabethtown, which cuts off the Stock House at Lyn. An application for a third shop license has been was not entertained.

Educationalists Meet.

Toronto, April 19.—Fifty years of vigorous progress was celebrated by a jubilee banquet of the Ontario Educational Association last night in the University. Teachers, public and high school, inspectors, trustees and others associated with education gathered in strength. The speaking was very good and generally of admirable brevity. P. W. Merchant, D. Pead, president, was in the chair. Those survivors of fifty years ago were present, R. W. Doan, R. Alexander and W. Anderson.

There were about 800 present. In numbers about equally male and female, except at the head table, where no more woman was deemed worthy to sit with his honor of Ontario or Secretary Doan. However, the women folk have always stooped to conquer, and undoubtedly the finer, and probably enjoyed themselves more than the more distinguished guests. They were not all teachers, for some were inspectors, and some were trustees.

Among those who sat in the seats of the mighty were Sir James Whitney, Principal Falconer, Archdeacon Cody, Principal Hutton, Principal Auden, Chancellor Burwash, who said grace, Prof. Baker, Dr. Ames, Birmingham, Dr. Hill, University of Missouri, Dean Pakenham and Provost Macklem.

Why They Want Canada's Timber.

Albany, N.Y., April 19.—A decrease of one billion feet in the total production of timber in the state the past year is reported by the state forest, fish and game commission. The commission reports that the cut has fallen off each year since 1907, and it is to be expected that each year, for many years to come, will show a similar shrinkage.

"It appears," says the commission, "that there has been an increase in the consumption of pulp wood grown in the state, but quite a large shrinkage in the production of lumber."

Millions of June Bugs.

London, Ont., April 19.—Farmers in Middlesex County report that in their spring plowing they have found the earth teeming with millions of June bugs, which do great damage to basswood, plum and cherry trees. The beetles lay their eggs in the ground and after hatching, the insect known as the white grub, eats on the roots of grain for three years before emerging as the June bug. No effective cure has yet been discovered for the destruction of the pest.

Three Boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Her.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered they get out of order.

Weak back is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. N. Larmour, Smith's Falls, Ont., writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About a year ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back and was so bad I could not even sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and with the greatest benefit. I only used three boxes and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble."

DELINE MURDER TRIAL COMMENCED THIS MORNING THE CROWN WITNESSES ARE NOW BEING EXAMINED

Prosecution Will Try to Show Deline Was Responsible for His Wife's Death Through His Brutality—Neighbours Testify to Condition of Body.

THE CORONER'S EVIDENCE

The murder charge against Hugh Deline of Belmont township in connection with the death of his wife whose half naked body was discovered in the woodshed of their squalid Belmont home on the evening of Sept. 15th last, was proceeded with before Mr. Justice Teetzel at the Assizes this morning. The interest taken in the case was indicated by the large number of curious spectators present.

Deline, who looked none the worse for his long confinement in the local gaol, pleaded "Not guilty" when arraigned.

The Grand Jury brought in a true bill against the prisoner yesterday.

A large number of witnesses will be called and an important feature of the evidence will be the testimony of the medical experts who will be heard, including Dr. Arthur Dukes Johnston, Chief Coroner of Toronto, Dr. R. Bruce Smith and Dr. Ryan of Kingston.

The prisoner is being defended by Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon, of Peterborough, while the Crown Prosecutor is Mr. E. Meredith, K.C., of London.

Address to Jury.

Crown Prosecutor E. Meredith, addressed the jury, impressing them with the seriousness of the charge and charging them with the great responsibility they have in the discharge of their duty as jurors. He said it was necessary that crime should be put down and that they should admit that they were bound to find a man guilty when they found the evidence sufficient. On the 15th Sept. last this man was living with his wife. He was not in good circumstances, but was a labouring man. On the 15th September he was working at a farmer's house. It was said he had about half a mile to go to reach his own house. He started for home about 3 o'clock p.m. and went to Mrs. Newall's, and it was to her he admitted that his wife was dead. A couple of other farmers were sent for. He made no statement to Mrs. Newall he wthe death occurred. The two farmers and himself went to the house and did not examine the body that night. The body was lying with the limbs exposed. A two year old child was lying upon a cot dressed and the 3 months old babe lying in a cradle. The remains of a supper was on the table. The woman was almost destitute of clothing and had no boots or shoes. The prisoner remained in the house, and sometime later complained of a headache and went to bed, while the neighbours sat up. He slept until morning and never went to see his poor wife in the woodshed. Her hands had been tied together and they had been cut to the bone. There were also finger nail marks near her mouth. The prisoner was asked to go and see his wife and he would not go. Next morning a doctor came and found the woman in the condition described. The constable came and the prisoner's trousers were found in the cellar.

There was a post mortem examination. The doctors found terrible results. The prisoner admitted to the doctor that he had been guilty of certain brutal acts.

"You may say this man is guilty of manslaughter," remarked the prosecutor, "but you can't say he is not guilty of any offence at all."

Samuel Newall was the first witness called, but did not respond.

Mary Jane Little was called. She was questioned by Mr. R. E. Wood.

"Is there any house near prisoner's?" asked Mr. Wood.

"No," replied witness.

"You were one of the ladies asked to go to the house when the news of the death was known?"

"Yes."

"In the rear of house is a summer kitchen or shed?"

"Yes."

"Was Mrs. Deline's body there?"

"Yes. She was lying on her back with only a wrapper on. The wrapper was disarranged. I just looked out of the door at her. I did not go near the body at all."

"Who came in the morning?"

"I don't know. I did not come back until eleven o'clock."

"Who were there then?"

"Doctor Kindred and two other men. Another woman and I examined the body then and found it in a terrible state. It was covered with human filth and all that she was clothed in was a wrapper and shirt."

The witness was then cross-examined br Mr. O'Connell.

"How far do you live from Mrs. Newall?"

"About half a mile; it is not as far away as Deline's place. Across the fields it is stumpy and stony, and

JUDGMENT WAS RESERVED IN THE CIVIL ACTION OF QUIGLEY VS. THE UNION BANK OF CANADA

In the civil case, Quigley versus the Union Bank, heard at the Spring Assizes yesterday, judgment was reserved until after the completion of the criminal case of Hugh Deline.

The plaintiffs, John R. Quigley and N. J. Quigley, were represented by Messrs. Hall, Hayes and Hall, while the Union Bank's case was presented by Messrs. A. B. Collville and E. L. Goodwill. The defendants were F. W. Fowles and John Welch

The action was brought about by the plaintiffs to recover the sum of $4,500 and interest from the Union Bank, this being trust monies deposited in the Hastings branch of the Union Bank by the executors of the late J. Quigley in trust for the plaintiffs. These trust monies, the plaintiffs alleged, were transferred from the trust account to the current account of the defendants, John Welch at the request of the bank, for the purpose of retaining the liability of the defendant, John Welch, to the Bank.

The action was heard before Mr. Justice Teetzel yesterday afternoon and evening, and was concluded at 10.30 p.m. last night.

As stated above, judgment was reserved. It is expected that judgment will be given to-morrow.

RICHARD CROKER'S DAUGHTER HAS SUED FOR DIVORCE

Case is of Peculiar Interest in Peterborough as the Husband J. J. Breen is a Resident of This City---Particulars of the Romance of a Millionaire's Daughter.

NEW YORK, APRIL 18.—Mrs. Ethel Croker-Breen, youngest daughter of the former Tammany chieftain, Richard Croker, has started a suit in Hudson county, New Jersey, for annulment of her marriage to John J. Breen, the Durland groom whom she married April 28, 1910, after having spurned an English nobleman and an Italian prince.

It has been reported that a number of conferences took place in this city before the action was started. As recently as last Tuesday Breen came here from Canada, where he is employed, and engaged counsel to make some show of defence to the action.

Search for Mrs. Breen last night revealed the fact that she is now living in Paris with her sister, the Duchess San Martino, who was Miss Florence Croker. They have a fine home at No. 24 Champs Elysee. She sailed several weeks ago.

Breen, who has been in charge of the stable of Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., at Peterborough, Ontario, has visited New York twice within three weeks the final visit taking place the day before that on which Richard Croker sailed for home in Ireland.

Confirmation of the report that the action had been started came from O'Neil Seelig, a friend of young Breen who is employed at the Knickerbocker stables in West Fifty-fourth St. At first he demurred to answering questions, but finally said:

"John J. Breen, who has been my friend for years, was in town, but left last Tuesday ,the day before Richard Croker sailed. Breen came down here to negotiate for the sale of the horse Midget. He was here only one day. Although he planned to remain longer, he received a telegram ordering him at once to Peterborough, Ontario.

"I understood the action has been started by the Croker family. My friend has made arrangements to return to New York in the early fall, and it is probable the matter will come up then for court action and disposition. He was down here a few weeks ago to attend the sale of the Paul Sorg horses, but made no purchase. Now I understand Mr. Breen has secured the services of an attorney to represent his interests in this action while he is away.

"This was a surprise to Breen. Last fall he was given assurances that his wife was to join him in Canada during the winter. He went to Ontario on that assurance and took charge of the Stratton string. You recall that the bride went to Paris with her mother soon after the news of the wedding became public. They told Breen it was necessary for her to go there to get fitted out.

"For a time she wrote very friendly letters to him. Then these suddenly ceased. It looked to Breen, as he told it to me, that the Crokers were using their influence to keep his girl-wife away.

"I understand that this suit was started in Hudson County, N. J. You know they were married in Hoboken. It has not come up in court yet, but when it does, the proceedings will be open, I am sure, if Breen has anything to say about that. The report that there has been a secret annulment is false, I am sure.

"I have been told that the family proceeded in this step to obtain the annulment upon three grounds. First, that as Breen was a Protestant and Miss Croker a Catholic, the marriage was not recognized because she did not obtain the sanction of the church. second, that the marriage was only a civil formality, and that is not recognized by the family; third that Breen was not a resident of New Jersey when he got the license, having merely taken a room in a hotel for the day. I am sure Breen will corroborate all I have told you."

Seelig added that Breen would arrive to-day in Toronto, where he is to show the Stratton horses in the Toronto Horse Show. He said he was confident his friend would not object to relating the facts, and he scoffed at the idea of a prearranged friendly action with the family.

Society refused to believe when the first report was given to the public, on May 1, 1910, that Richard Croker's daughter had eloped and married a groom. Miss Croker laughed when asked about it, and said it was ridiculous. Breen dehied it vigorously, and declared he was "merely a servant in the eyes of Miss Croker." Her brothers denied it, and the Justice of the Peace who had performed the ceremony backed them up by declaring that a photograph of Miss Croker that was placed before him did not resemble the woman he had married to Breen.

But May 3 the facts were made public in a sworn affidavit by Justice Samuel Enger, the man who performed the ceremony. He admitted, under oath, that he had kept the facts quiet at the urgent request of Breen, who told the Magistrate that he feared the confirmation would cost him his position at a local riding academy.

When Richard Croker reached New York last November he made this statement about his daughter and Breen:

"My daughter Ethel is now with her mother in Paris and will remain there. There is no truth in the report that she has a thought of a reunion. She will not return to Mr. Breen. I have nothing further to say."

HAD LEG BROKEN

Eight Year Old Norman Asling Painfully Injured by Being Run Over Last Night—Struck by Delivery Rig

CHEST WAS INJURED

Norman Routley Asling, the eight-year-old son of Mr. Welling Asling, George street, a shoe-maker in the employ of J. W. Carey, was painfully injured as the result of a collision between the small waggon in which he was coasting down the hill at the corner of McDonnell and Aylmer streets and a delivery rig. The accident occurred at 7 o'clock last evening. The driver of the delivery horse was in no way responsible for the accident. the boy shooting down the hill at top speed in his waggon and colliding with the cart, the wheels of which passed over him, with the result that his leg was broken above the knee, and he sustained a severe crushing about the chest. He was picked up and carried to his father's house, where Dr. Morgan was called in. The little fellow was afterwards removed to Nicholls' Hospital in an ambulance.

Blacklisters Pleaded Guilty to Unlawfully Procuring Liquor

The exclusive and expensive organization known as the Black List Club, whose members have from time to time generously contributed to the coffers of the city was represented in police court to-day by charges against two "Indians" of having unlawfully procured liquor. The charges pleaded guilty and Magistrate Dumble had nothing to do but inscribe a $10 fine on each indictment.

The Black List Club, it may be added, was never in a more flourishing condition and has a membership at the present writing of exactly one hundred, the biggest since the movement was inaugurated.

Tom Longboat's Mark Beaten by Nearly Two Minutes in To-day's Big Classic Event---Canadians Made a Good Showing, Especially the Veteran Dan Sheridan---Quarter of a Million People Saw the Race.

Special to The Examiner.

BOSTON, APRIL 19.—One hundred and forty long-distance runners, from all points of the United States and Canada, started off in good order when the pistol was fired at noon today for the great Boston Marathon classic. There was a dozen of favourites, nearly every runner having his backers for a place. Many people think this is a Canadian year and that James Corkery of Toronto, is the best choice. The distance is 25 miles, and Tom Longboat of Canada holds the record at 2 hours, 24 mins., 24 secs.

Boston, 12.30 p.m.—A quarter of a million people line the route of the Marathon race. The whole field started lively, but Ahlgreen of New York, and Root of Philadelphia, soon took the lead. The Canadian runners are away back. Sheridan of Toronto, being twelfth. So far the leaders are behind their time.

12.40 p.m.—Corkery of Toronto, is making a fine sprint and he is now sixth.

1 p.m.—Nine miles from start, Corkery of Toronto is fifth, and Sheridan of Toronto is eighth.

1.25 p.m.—At fourteen miles, the first man is Ahlgreen, of New York; the second, Madden, of Boston, and the third, Corkery of Toronto.

2.10—At twenty miles: First, Demar, Dorchester; 2nd, Madden, Boston; 3rd Faborer, Montreal; 4th, Sheridan, Toronto.

(Flash).—Demar wins the Marathon and breaks the record. Time 2 hours, 22 mins., 38 secs., beating Longboat's time by nearly two minutes.

The official time is 2 hours, 21 minutes, 39 3-5 seconds.

FIRST CLAUSE OF THE VETO BILL IS PASSED

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, APRIL 19.—Premier Asquith, after an all-night session, secured the passage of the first clause of the Veto Bill. The motion of the Government was sustained by a vote of 143 to 78, many of the members being awakened from a sound sleep in their seats by the division whips. The Government will insist on getting the question settled before the Coronation.

RECIPROCITY BILL IS SOMEWHAT SIDE-TRACKED

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 19.—The Canadian reciprocity bill will be sidetracked, more or less, this afternoon, when the bill, to make a free entry of many necessities of life from Canada, will be discussed in the House of Representatives. In its argument favouring the free list the majority report of the Ways and Means Committee admits that the bill would result in a direct and immediate loss to the United States of $10,000,000 customs duty, annually. The report quotes the various speeches of Taft favouring reciprocity as proof that the country should go further and make certain articles free, thus reducing the cost of living in the United States. It is expected that the discussion of this bill will be long and very vigorous.

Midnight Chorus Was Interrupted By Police

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage beast," but Arthur Tooey has discovered that it has a widely different effect upon a policeman. Arthur made the discovery ou Thursday night of last week when Police Constables Meagher and Brown invaded an open-air concert at which he was present, and as a result he appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning charged with being disorderly.

"P. C. Brown and I were on George street," P. C. Meagher informed the Court, "when we heard singing within the Chinese restaurant. Presently four men came out and commenced to sing. I told them to stop and they did so for a moment, but when they reached the Customs House they started again and when they reached the Opera House corner they seemed to be all singing. We went after them and found them at the corner of King and Aylmer street holding a concert. We arrested the prisoner and the rest made their escape in different directions."

Tooey informed the Magistrate that he was not singing although the men with him were. He did not know the other members of the party, having met them in the restaurant.

"You know the story of the bird that got into bad company," the Magistrate remarked. "It had to take its medicine with the rest." "Music is all right in its place, but it is not appreciated when people are trying to sleep."

He gave Tooey the benefit of the doubt and dismissed the case.

PRIMROSE DAY.

To-day—April 19th, is Primrose day in England—in Great Britain especially, but in fact all over the world where British Toryism, finds representatives. To-day Tories in Great Britain are wearing primroses or the badge of the Primrose League, in their button holes, in memory of one of the great British statesmen, Earl Beaconsfield, whose favourite flower was the primrose, and who died just thirty years ago to-day. The statue, erected to his memory, in London, is literally hidden behind hundreds of wreaths and other floral designs, made wholly from primroses, and are viewed by thousands of his admirers. That a Spanish Jew should attain to the position of first minister of the greatest Christian nation and empire of the world, is an example of the breadth and inclusiveness of the genius of British institutions.

CLEAN THE BACK PREMISES.

It is a truism that the majority of our calamities come from carelessness or some form of neglect of precaution. Ottawa has had 1196 cases of typhoid since January 1st, 1911, and the cause was bad water, owing to carelessness in allowing the city water supply to be polluted with sewage—something that could, with proper precaution, have been prevented. The outbreak, primarily due to bad water, was aggravated and continued by the neglect of preventable sanitary precautions. Now is the time of year that should be devoted to a thorough cleansing of our city; and, to insure a summer of sanitary conditions, all decaying rubbish should be removed from private premises and public places. The attention of the Board of Health is directed to the lanes in the central part of the city, which are in a veritably ghastly condition of filth and untidiness. Prompt action is demanded in the interests of the public health and comfort. By making the city clean in every part, we shall be protecting the public health and discouraging the house fly, which as one of the most sporadic agents of disease, dissemination breeds joyously in household filth, apt to fester in the hot sun of early spring and summer. If the Board of Health does not wish to earn the title of Board of Disease, it must act promptly.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Mail and Empire nominates Hon. A. G. MacKay as next leader of the Liberal party. It is very kind of the Mail and Empire to select the Liberal leader; it's a good deal more than it can do for its own party.

The London Advertiser, without the fear of less majestic before its eyes, calls Col. Sam Hughes "an Ottawa nuisance." Not so; Col. Sam. is the effervescent powder that gives fizz and sparkle to the ditch-water dullness into which parliament often subsides.

The Winnipeg Telegram compares Dominion expenditures upon railways with expenditures upon agriculture, to the disadvantage of the latter. This is one of the many devices which Conservatives are adopting in order to counteract the effect of the reciprocity agreement, which has won many farmers to the Liberal cause. But as has often been pointed out, such a comparison falls flat, because, in the West especially, expenditure upon railways has been the surest way of assisting the farmer to market his products.

The Mail denies that Sir John Macdonald, in his last speech from the throne, favoured reciprocity. It is not worth while for the organ to make such a denial. The Conservative party would not be bound by Sir John. In fact, it refuses to be bound by anything. It has whistled reciprocity in all the keys of the gamut, and it cannot be blamed at repudiating Sir John Macdonald after swallowing itself on the naval question—voting solidly for a Canadian navy at one session, and voting solidly against, at the next.

AN ASPECT OF FREER TRADE.

(Toronto Star.)

At the foundation of all trade is the fact that one party to a bargain has something which the other desires to buy, and that the other party has a quid pro to exchange for it. The grocer wants his customer's money. The customer wants the grocer's household supplies. The favour with which a citizen regards the establishment of a new and superior grocery store does not indicate that he thinks himself able to "beat" the proprietor, but that he approves the prospect of a better service than he has been getting. On the other hand, the pleasure which a grocer feels in securing new custom, is no sign of a sinister intention to give bad value. Whenever there is a fair exchange of values which enables both parties to get what they desire, both buyer and seller are pleased, and the mutual satisfaction does not indicate a bad bargain, but a good one.

Conservative newspapers are blind to these facts when they insist upon quoting American approval of the trade agreement as a reason for its rejection. Both parties to the bargain have reason to approve of it, because it affords to both an opportunity to buy and sell where they can buy and sell to the most advantage.

WHAT WE SOLD IN FACE OF THE TARIFF.

(Weekly Sun.)

Some figures given by Hon. Mr. Paterson in the House of Commons last week are worth a whole volume of argument as to the value of the United States market for Canadian farm products.

These figures show that in the face of a duty of 30c. per bushel $66,608 worth of Canadian barley was shipped to the United States in the year ending March 31st; despite a duty of 25c. per bushel, $132,810 worth of Canadian apples were sold in the same market; $148,676 worth of berries climbed over a tariff wall represented by one cent per quart; $199,854 worth of Canadian butter paid a tax of 6c. per pound in order to find sale in the United States; we sold $569,679 in sheep and lambs notwithstanding the fact that the tax on the former was $1.50 and on the latter 75c. per head; and, finally, $1,714,528 worth of Canadian cream went into the United States and paid a duty of five cents per gallon in doing so.

If we sold so largely, in the face of such high duties, it needs no argument to show that we would sell much more largely with the duties wholly abolished.

TWO GREAT FINANCIERS.

(Brantford Expositor.)

As a revenue producer the British Chancellor of the Exchequer is as great a success as Hon. W. S. Fielding. The first year of the unimpeded operation of the Lloyd-George budget closed on March 31 last. The results show that the receipts were £202,850,588, or £4,059,588 more than estimated by Mr. Lloyd-George. The gross expenditure was £198,243,667, leaving a surplus of £5,606,921, nor nearly $30,000,000. It certainly is a striking coincidence that the Canadian and the British surplus for the fiscal year should be practically the same figure, but it must not be forgotten that a considerable amount of the revenue received by the British Chancellor represented arrears from the previous year. The normal revenue was £172,504,588 and the normal expenditure £171,936,807. For the current year, beginning April 1, the Chancellor will have to provide for £180,000,000 or about £7,500,000 more than the normal receipts of the past year. It is probable the new methods of taxation will meet every demand which is made upon them. Thus far Mr. Lloyd-George has been vindicated in every particular. The wealthier classes of Great Britain have been compelled to bear a larger share of the public burdens, and the county instead of being ruined by the shifting of the load, has been enjoying unusual prosperity.

A BEAVER COINAGE.

(Montreal Herald.)

Is it not about time the Canadian mint had evolved a distinctively Canadian gold coinage? It is true, no doubt, that the nature of business in Canada does not as yet call for a very extensive use of gold, and yet there is a good deal of it here, what with English sovereigns, American eagles, and the fractions thereof. The mint is popularly supposed to be coining sovereigns. Why not coin some beavers? There is first rate historical basis for the adoption of the beaver as the emblem of a national coinage. Coin collectors know that there is already a beaver coinage that is very much prized. The old Northwest Company issued beaver tokens as a convenience in their dealings with the Indian trappers. The Hudson Bay Company also issued a set of tokens in terms of many beaver skins, the denominations being one, a half, a quarter and an eighth. Why not adopt the same nomenclature for the coinage of a country which puts the beaver in its coat of arms? Make the beaver twenty dollars, with ten and fives, and it would not be very long before the coinage would serve as one more excellent advertisement of the growing strength of this country. There need be no fear of a Canadian gold coinage being treated with indifference or suspicion, as Canadian silver coinage frequently is. Gold is gold, the world over, and the value of the coin is the value of the metal in it. It was right and proper to establish a Canadian mint; once established it should be turning Canadian gold into distinctively Canadian coins.

SHARPE'S SHARP CURVE.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

W. H. Sharpe, Conservative M.P., for Lisgar, Man., is having his troubles this Parliamentary holiday. He has gone home to talk reciprocity with his constituents and he is finding it quite a contract. In the first place he has to explain away a letter written soon after the reciprocity agreement was introduced into the House in which he said:

"When Hon. Mr. Fielding first presented the proposal to the House of Commons, I was greatly pleased with it, and I felt no matter what the party, which I am identified with, did, I would support it, because I thought I saw the great advantage it would be to us in Southern Manitoba. I wish also to say that I think I know the conditions in Southern Manitoba just as well as any man that you will have at your meeting on the 18th. Now our farmers can take their wheat, oats, barely, flax, beef and porks, across the line into Northern Dakota and get a higher price for it there than they can at home."

That was a frank enough expression of opinion; but the trouble is that since then Mr. Sharpe has seen new light, the light of party pressure in the caucus, and he has now recanted and asks his constituents to recant also. In fact he now says: "I wish to say frankly that I do not like the looks of this deal and I would much prefer that you would not ask me to support it at the present time."

But, in his change of heart, Mr. Sharpe has thrown an anchor to windward. He would give the farmers of Manitoba Federal aid to a chilled meat industry instead of freer trade with the United States, and asserts that that is the policy of the whole Conservative party. When, however, confronted with the statement that Hon. George E. Foster is opposed to the proposal and when asked what the party is going to do with him, Mr. Sharpe replied: "He was against it, but he had to come to time. We forced him into the harness."

That is an interesting bit of party history, but unfortunately the record does not show anything of the sort. Indeed it proved the very reverse, for a few days after the western farmers had been down here to ask for aid to such a chilled meat proposal, Mr. Foster over his own signature published a vigorous onslaught in the Canadian Century upon the proposal which he described as "fairly revolutionary."

But that is a matter for the Conservatives to settle among themselves. Meanwhile, the interesting thing is that Mr. Sharpe announces that if his constituents persist in asking him to support reciprocity he will resign his seat and appeal for a new mandate. Should he do so, we would be given an interesting illustration of the opinion of Manitoba on the issue.

Bagdad Railway A Pivotal Point On Which European Diplomacy Revolves

(London Advertiser)

Probably not many persons in Canada have heard of the Bagdad Railway, yet it is the pivot on which the diplomacy of Europe is revolving in the Near East. It has been an acute point of difference between Great Britain and Germany for years. The trouble started in 1899, when Sultan Abdul Hamid conceded to a German company the construction of a railway through Mesopotamia to Bagdad, in Asia Minor. Finally, in 1903, the Unionist Government refused to agree to the terms proposed by Germany for British co-operation in the enterprise, and the position then taken up by the Foreign Secretary, Lord Lansdowne, is the position which Lord Morley said in a recent debate is still maintained by the British Government. That is, it does stand for international control, and a guarantee that no preferential rates shall be set up by the management, hostile to British trade.

Last year the syndicate, which is still negotiating with the reformed Turkish Government respecting the financial and other detail conditions, was reconstructed, so that the board now consists of four Germans, one Austrian, three Frenchmen, three Swiss, and one Turk. It is thus international in appearance, but the one Austrian, one Turk and probably one of the Swiss could perhaps be relied upon to vote with the Germans in matters involving political policy. Just now the suggestion is finding some favour that the British Government shall seek from the Turks a control over the south section of the railway from Bagdad to the Persian Gulf. Whether this is feasible and whether the Porte will see its own advantage in such an arrangement is a question. Lord Morley announced that the Turkish Government has at any rate regained within certain limitations its liberty of action in regard to this section of the coming railway, and is no longer bound by the late Sultan's concession just there. It has made proposals to the British Government touching this section, but until the negotiations have proceeded further the foreign office declines to make any detailed statement, wishing it to be thoroughly understood, however, that it desires a settlement which will remove all anxiety as far as British trade interests are concerned. For this purpose the Government declares that Germany must be a consenting party to any convention made with the Porte. Germany will hardly object to that!

In the meantime comes the official report of the new German-Turkish agreement, signed on March 21, at Constantinople. The company now is guaranteed a subvention which assures the building of the road as far as Bagdad within five years after the plans have been approved. Evidently, although the company is internationalized, it is Germany that takes most interest in promoting the project. The North German Gazette, which announced the agreement on March 22, adds that "with regard to the constitution of the line from Bagdad to the Persian Gulf a detailed agreement has not yet been concluded." Probably the difficulty is not so much one of financial support as of control.

British commercial interests are so paramount in the Gulf that they have every right to Ottoman consideration. Moreover, the British protectorate over Koweit, the only feasible terminus of the railway on the Gulf, makes it possible for Great Britain seriously to embarrass the success of the line if her claims are not fairly treated. While, therefore, Turkey can do as she likes in the matter of railway-building on her own territory, she must satisfy Great Britain as to the trade future of the Mesopotamian region or stand the consequences of unfair action. The great question at the present moment then, is the arrangement to be made about the railway along the river from Bagdad to the delta.

There are some who would minimize the importance of this road. Is not the river navigation itself the cheapest traffic? What is the use of a railway through the swamps which beset the lower course of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers? But why then railway lines along such rivers as the St. Lawrence? What the whole Mesopotamian region needs, first of all, is the introduction of law and social order into its chaos. A railway is the very best means of effecting this end. The bloodthirsty Kurds and the Bedouins of the desert villages must be tamed by the introduction of the iron road. The railway will be a hypodermic syringe, pumping in the drug of solid government, and restoring the region to its golden age of long ago. Peace and order once established, the Euphrates itself is next to the tamed, its waters diverted by dams and canls from the flying sands of the broad upper country. Then the land which was ages ago the greatest of corn-producers, will again wax fat and populous, and play its part in feeding the growing world.

There seems to be no reason why Germany and England should not come to a satisfactory agreement with the Ottoman Government. All three countries will profit immensely from Mesopotamian redemption, and development, Turkey, no doubt, most of all.

ELLIOT'S

WATCH FOR OUR SUMMER OPENING ABOUT MAY 10th

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

SOME weeks ago I included among other suggestions of unusual occupations for women a letter received from a woman who had been very successful in raising hens.

This woman said that she had fifty-five hens, averaging four dozen eggs a day, that her feed and supplies averaged $3.00 a month, and that she sold the eggs at 40 cents a dozen the year around to a regular customer who called for them.

This letter called forth the following protest, presenting the other side of the picture, which I think fairness bids me publish:

"My Dear Miss Cameron:—Your talk on hens and eggs in yesterday's paper is perfectly absurd, wherever you got it from. The poultry business is an all-year-round business, and there probably are not fifty-five hens in the country who will average 48 eggs per day. If one had a flock that would do that the eggs would sell at a great big price for setting purposes. Go to a practical poultry man and see if his books will show much over an average of 150 eggs per hen a year.

"Then the feed expense is way off. It figures up at 83 cents per year a hen. No one can feed for that. Furthermore, you allow nothing for houses, nothing for labour or casual losses—and where, oh, where can you find a market that will pay 40 cents a dozen the year round? Please tell me, for I grow eggs for a living and really would like such a market myself.

"I am afraid your article will influence someone ignorant of the business to start to get rich on a few hens, with dark failure for a result. For the right kind of woman poultry keeping is a congenial and fairly profitable business. Take one season with another, with business ability and economy all along the line one should clear from a dollar to a dollar and a quarter per year on a hen. Of course experts growing fancy stock can do more, but the average woman seeking a livelihood is not a poultry expert, and would have to depend on selling a good quantity of eggs for family use. Such a woman could manage probably five hundred hens and raise chickens to sell."

Another idea for the woman who wants some unusual method of earning money is thus suggested by a reader:

"A woman who lives near a school house would no doubt find a number of teachers who crave a hot lunch at noon, but who have no time to seek it. If a hot, home-made, tray lunch were brought to these teachers' own class-rooms at a reasonable figure, say 25 cents, they would doubtless be glad to patronize the person who could supply them."

• • •

A woman whom I know has worked up quite a successful business as a renovator.

That term covers a good many kinds of work. It includes putting in fresh yokes to dresses, remodeling sleeves and cuffs and minor details into style, doing fine mending, taking spots out of delicate fabrics, curling feathers, cleansing white gloves and many similar operations too numerous to mention.

This woman also makes fitted underwear for people who like home-made underclothing, and a few plain shirtwaists, but the most of her time is taken up with the renovating.

She happens to know a good many working girls who are too busy or incapable of doing their own odd jobs and she finds them both good customers and good advertisers.

In the case of the feathers and the gloves she charges prices slightly under professional rates, and having a knack about such things, removes and replaces the feathers.

Altogether, by putting herself into whatever niche needs filling she has made a fairly comfortable living. The trade, of course, has developed very gradually, but she thinks that any woman suitably located and with a knack at such things might develop a similar basis if she did not have to depend upon her earnings at first.

Don't forget to send in that suggestion of some unusual occupation for women. "We want it. Don't say "So me day," but take your pen in hand and "Do it now."

Y. M. C. A. Intermediates Beat Collegiate Five

The Y. M. C. A. Intermediate Basketball team turned the tables on the Collegiate Institute five last night by winning a lively well-played game by 38 to 21. The half-time score was 20 to 15, in favour of the intermediates, who had to come from behind to win out. Early in the battle it looked as if the Students were going to repeat their previous victory. They had weight and stature on the red and white team and started scoring early, leading at one stage by 13 to 5, and then by 15 to 8. The difference in weight between the two teams seemed to presage a victory for the Collegiate at this stage, but the Intermediates got their combination working and commenced to find the baskets, with the result that they pulled down the lead point by point until at the half they were five points in front and were never challenged during the second half, outscoring the students by eight baskets and two fouls to three baskets. The splendid shooting from close quarters and all angles of Nicholls and Hastie contributed largely to this result, while the systematic combination and checking of the whole team was too much for the Collegiate. Ray played a splendid defence game for the losers. The teams were:

Referee—Dug Loomis.

CLOSING OUT BY PUBLIC AUCTION

The China Hall on George street has started an auction sale, since last Saturday, to close out the entire stock of European and Japanese china, regardless of cost, to turn into cash. Also they received a consignment of an immense quantity of Japanese high art goods, to be sacrificed during a short period of time in this city. The store is crowded every after noon and night, and things are going at very low prices. The prices are about one-quarter usually got in Toronto. The store is beautifully displayed with over 200 cases of real hand-painted china of all kinds of useful and ornamental articles, as well as antique and modern pieces, silk mandarin coats, kimonos, etc., are entirely new to our people, as they are directly imported from Japan. All goods are thoroughly explained by Mr. Y. Otsuka, the Japanese auctioneer. The sale is started at 2.30 p. m. and 8 o'clock at night. The store is opened for public inspection during mornings. They expect to sell the entire stock quickly. This affords the grandest opportunity to our citizens to have genuine art china at bargain prices. Advertisement appears on the last page.

Using the Raw Material.

When the late Hon. A. G. Blair was leading the local Government of New Brunswick, he was once defeated in his home county of York, and subsequently returned for the County of Queens.

During the succeeding sessions of the Legislature, Mr. H. H. Pitts, who had been on the winning ticket in York, never missed a single opportunity of assailing Mr. Blair, and on one occasion he began a particularly savage attack with these words: "Mr. Speaker, having killed 'the elephant of York,' I shall now proceed to tan his hide."—Saturday Night.

THE SERVICES OF POPULAR CHOIR LEADE RECOGNIZED

Mr. R. J. Devey Honoured by Being Presented With a Very Handsome Gold Ring by the Members of St. John's Choir.

AN ENJOYABLE EVENT

St. John's choristers spent a very happy time last night at the home of Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie, 660 Stewart' street, who is an enthusiastic chorister and a valued helper in all choral work. The early part of the evening was devoted to practising "Mendelssohn's Ninety-Fifth Psalm and various anthems. Then the Rev. Canon Davidson rose to thank Mr. and Mrs. Ryerson Ritchie for their kindness and help in all parts of church life, and especially for the kindly invitation to the choir, which was much appreciated by all present, and was a splendid way to promote the best of good feelings between those who meet so often in practice and service. Canon Davidson made reference to the splendid work of the choir, and took the opportunity of thanking them all for their faithful services. He had a most pleasing duty to perform and that was to acknowledge the valuable work of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. R. J. Devey, whose persevering and tireless energy was mainly responsible for the building up of their choir of which they all felt so proud. At the vestry meeting held the night before, the members of the congregation spoke in terms of the highest praise of choir and leader. On behalf of those present he asked Mr. Devey to accept a gold ring, with Masonic design as a slight token of the high esteem felt by the choir for their leader and Mrs. Ritchie gracefully made the presentation. In accepting with gratitude the splendid present, Mr. R. J. Devey heartily thanked the choir for the evident good feeling prevailing between them and ensured them that their steady, earnest attendance at practice and service was quite as much responsible for their present high state of efficiency as a choir, as any efforts of his own, and as choirmaster, it was a great delight to him to have the privilege of training them.

They knew that the clergy, wardens and congregation were behind them, and the ring which came as a complete surprise to him was expressive of the unity existing all round, and would be valued by him as long as he lived more on that account than any other.

The reverend Charles Carpenter also added words of appreciation, as did Mr. H. W. Morphet and other choristers.

Dainty refreshments were then served by the hostess, and a very pleasant evening concluded by singing the old hymn, "Abide With Me."

DRESSING A SHIP.

A Man-of-War Wears More Than One Suit of Clothes.

INNER AND OUTER GARMENTS.

Besides Its Coat of Armor Plate It Has a Special Set of Underclothes to Protect the Vital Parts of Its Anatomy. Mineral Wool Mufflers.

Battleships wear coats of stout armor plate, as everybody knows, but everybody does not know that they wear undergarments which are produced chiefly from cocoanuts. Your most powerful man-of-war is really a very delicate object and requires special underclothing so that some vital parts of its anatomy may not become too cold and so that other equally vital portions may not become too hot.

From stem to stern, which is another way of saying from head to toe, your enormous super-Dreadnought is enveloped in an undergarment placed immediately behind its topcoat or armor plate. This is its special mackintosh, or, rather, waterproof, which acts as a protection from fire as well as water.

In the ordinary way if a shot pierced the side of a battleship water would pour in at the hole and possibly the ship might sink, but this is obviated by providing a backing to the armor. Great secrecy is kept in the various navies regarding the material used and its arrangement.

In many of the latest battleships, however, the coating is made of cellulose, which again is obtained from the fibrous cocoanut rind. Cellulose possesses the peculiar property of swelling immediately if it comes in contact with salt water. Therefore the moment that water pours in at a hole at the ship's side the cellulose almost instantly expands and so closes the aperture. Of course the cellulose is especially treated in order to render it fireproof.

A man-of-war has its vitality enormously diminished if certain portions of it become too cold, in much the same way as its human tenants. Accordingly its boiler and steam pipes are clothed with "jackets." In some cases the jackets are made of ordinary blanketing, others of a fibrous clay-like composition or even of close grained wood. In general the material used for a ship's underclothing of this description consists of mineral wool.

However, the great ship is more likely to suffer from the effects of heat than from those of cold. There is always the danger owing to the newer type of machinery employed that the powder magazines may get too hot.

In the latest man-of-war the stores are surrounded by a thick coating of mineral wool. Mineral wool, by the way, has nothing whatever to do with wool, as it consists of a mass of snowy threads of a kind of glass. It is made by blowing jets of high pressure steam through the furnaces in the manufacture of iron and steel.

Enormous quantities of this strange variety of wool are used on board for the purposes of underclothing the bulkheads and the more delicate portions of the ship's body. This invaluable substance acts equally well as a protector from heat and from cold. It is such a remarkable nonconductor of heat that it is used for covering the refrigerators and the cold storage chambers and therefore the explosive stores.

In the dockyards all men who are employed in packing the mineral wool in the spaces on the ships are obliged to wear masks. This is to prevent the sharp needlelike particles from being inhaled and so causing chest troubles of fatal character.

The ammunition rooms themselves are kept cool by a refrigerating plant in addition to being clothed in mineral wool, the same applying to the ammunition passages. The wool is also packed between the double bulkheads which separate the boiler spaces from the other portions of the vessel. Altogether the uses of the mineral wool on board are extremely numerous. Even reindeer hair is to be met with on board in the capacity of a particular sort of underclothing. This material is very light—considerably lighter than cork, for instance—and it is not so subject to decay. For this reason among its many uses it is of great value as a filling for the life buoys.—Boston Transcript.

THE UNDERFED

How Children of the Ignorant Are Robbed of Oatmeal

A canvass made among the intelligent shows that seven homes in eight serve oatmeal. Among the ignorant another canvass show that not one home in twelve serves oats. The children grow up incapable because bodies and brains are starved.

Nature stores in oats more energy food, more brain food, more nerve food than in any other grain that grows. That's why children crave oatmeal. There is nothing to take its place.

This is a food on which it doesn't pay to be careless. There is a very wide difference in oat foods—a difference in richness and food value. Don't serve the common kind.

Only the richest, plumpest grains are used in Quaker Oats. They are selected by 62 siftings. Only ten pounds are obtained from a bushel. The result is a food rich in all the oat elements—the utmost in oatmeal. Yet the cost to you is but one-half cent per dish.

OFFER OF SHARES RUSSELL CAR CO.

A. E. Ames & Co. Offer an Recommend for Subscription $900,000 of Preference Stock

In connection with their offering by advertisement in this morning's papers of Preference shares of the Russell Motor Car Co., Limited, Messrs. A. E. Ames & Co. have sent out the following letter to their clients:

RUSSELL MOTOR CAR CO. LIMITED

"Enclosed herewith please find prospectus and subscription form relating to an offering, at par, of $800,000, of 7 p.c. Cumulative Convertible Preference shares of the above named Company.

"We strongly recommend purchase of these shares, for the following reasons:

"The Company has a large earning power and is very capably managed.

"The sale of this block of stock places it in a strong financial position.

"If, as is expected, the estimates of earnings for the next four months are realized, there will, at the end of that time, not be a dollar of "water" in either the Preference or Common stock, the surplus of assets over liabilities being larger than the Company's whole capital stock, without considering patents, trade marks, good will, etc., which nevertheless have considerable value.

"The Convertible feature of the Preference Stock is very valuable, in view of the Common stock commencing dividends at the rate of 7 p.c. per annum, and having earnings and prospects to warrant the hope of increase in the dividend rate from time to time.

"A comparison which is of interest in the present connection is that of the F. N. Burt Co. Preference Convertible shares, which we offered for subscription in September, 1909, have for some time been selling around 120, with the Common around 115. The Burt Company profits are not stronger in relation to its capitalization than those of the Russell Motor Car Company, and we do not regard the prospects of the Car Company as less favourable than those of the Burt Company. The Car Company stock is going on a basis of 7 p.c. dividend on the Common, while, so far, the Burt Company has not declared more than a 6 p.c. rate. We think that the course of prices for the Russell Motor Car Co. shares is likely to be fairly closely in line with that of the Burt Company securities."

Subscription books are now open at the offices of A. E. Ames & Co., 7 and 9 King street E., Toronto, and will close not later than 4 o'clock on the 25th inst., with the right, however, to close books at any time. Those intending to invest are advised to send in their subscriptions early.

The Party Frock.

Party frocks for small girls are more attractive than usual this winter, for, although the lines remain about the same, details and materials vary, and the note of exquisite fineness and daintiness which distinguishes the simple evening frock for the young girl is repeated in the party frock of her little sister.

Fine white net trimmed with tucking and insertion, chiffon, lingerie fabrics and china silk are all utilized in the making of the party frock for the small girl. India silk, messaline or soft satin is used for the slip. In some instances, the outer frock is not attached to the lining.

The illustration shows a dainty little dress of all over eyelet embroidery, which will be found as useful for summer wear as it is appropriate for the dance dress. A slip of pink silk gives the color note.

TRUE IRISH BULLS.

They Have a Flavor All Their Own, "the Effect of Climate."

BRANDS FROM OTHER LANDS.

The Best of the French Bulls Are Acted, Not Spoken—Some Droll Examples of the Italian, Portuguese Dutch and German.

Sir Richard Steele explained why his countrymen made bulls: "'Tis the effect of the climate, sir. If an Englishman were born in Scotland he would make as many," said he. It is not every one who knows a bull when he sees her. It may be no bull, but merely a blunder—a betise, as the French have it. To make sure that we have the true criterion let us first set down a few of the genuine, orthodox Irish kind:

He built the wall wider than it was high, so that when it fell down it should be higher than it was wide.

Two weary and footsore Irishmen come to a milestone, ten miles to Dublin. "Arrah," says one, "'tis but five miles apiece."

Disputing of the date of St. Patrick's birthday, "He couldn't have had two unless he was twins!"

An Irish sailor reported that in Philadelphia they copper-bottomed the tops of the houses with sheet lead.

Give me the loan of a hatchet to saw an empty barrel of flour in two to make the dog a pigpen.

His estate is divided by impenetrable furse ditches made of quarried stones set on edge.

An Irishman, describing a glorious fight, said, "There was only one whole nose in the house, and that was the taypot's."

In these and in hundreds like them we have the true flavor of the Irish bull.

There are genuine bulls in French, but they are rare. The genius of the language does not lend itself to anything less than neat precision. A French bull is usually nothing more than a betise. Still, French bulls exist.

Leon, Bishop and Count of Lisieux wrote to the Duchess of Brissac as follows:

"Madame, knowing how fond you are of red partridges, I send you herewith half a dozen. Three of them are gray, and one is a woodcock. You will find this letter in the bottom of the basket."

A Frenchman used a large stone jar for a pillow, explaining that it was not hard because he had stuffed it full of hay.

The very best French bulls are acted, not spoken. The Duke de St. Simon relates that a lady, lying ill, was much disturbed by the ringing of the church bells. To deaden the noise her lover had the street in front of her house laid with straw.

A spoken bull in French is apt to be something different from the Irish variety, something more like a betise, as has been said. And it is difficult to retain the flavor in translation. "Ce sont toujours les memes soldats qui se font tuer," says Marshal Bugeaud of his army. This loses a little when one translates, "It is always the same soldiers who get themselves killed."

"En fait d'inutilites il ne faut que le necessaire" is more highly colored in the French than in its translation, "Only so many useless things are required as are strictly necessary."

Here is the translation of part of an Italian letter:

"We have had a most famous earthquake. If by the mercy of God it had lasted for another half hour we should all have gone to paradise, from which may God deliver us. Whether you receive this letter or not, please advise me in either case."

Here is a Portuguese bull. In offering a reward for the recovery of the corpse of a drowned man his relatives remarked that the deceased might be identified, if found, by a slight impediment in his speech.

After much research it has been so far impossible to discover a genuine Spanish bull, but here is a Dutch bull:

And here is a German bull;

"Der Zahn der Zeit, der alle Thranen trocknet, wird auch uber diese Sache Gras wachsen lassen" ("The tooth of time, that wipes away all tears, will permit grass to grow over this matter also").

Blunders in English speech are not uncommon. The orthodox bull of Ireland has scarcely crossed the channel.

A fellow of the Royal society speaks of "the earthquake that had had the honor to be noticed by the Royal society."

"The West Indies will now have a future which they have never had in the past" sounds promising until one sees that its bullish quality is a mere blunder by which the word "opportunity" was omitted. There is none of the flavor of the famous definition of salt by the Irish schoolboy, "Salt is that which makes your potatoes taste nasty if you don't put it in."

Even the best of the foreign bulls in Latin tongues evoke the suspicion that they are mere translations from Irish originals. The Dutch, the Germans and perhaps the English may have the genuine article at times. No distinctively American bulls have emerged from the long research that is the foundation of these few paragraphs.—New York Sun.

A Killing Joke.

"I made Dr. Knifem, the eminent surgeon, very angry when I met him one winter day enjoying a spin over the snow."

"How did you make him mad?"

"I congratulated him on his sense of the fitness of things in taking advantage of every chance to go on a sledging expedition."—Baltimore American.

Two Historic Drinks.

Sir Philip Sidney received his death wound before the walls of Zutphen on Sept. 22, 1586. Parched with thirst, he called for a drink. As he was putting the bottle to his mouth his eyes fell upon a desperately wounded soldier who as he was being carried past threw him longing glances, "which Sir Philip perceiving took the bottle from his lips before he drank and delivered to the poor man with these words: 'Thy necessity is greater than mine.'"

At the battle of Ravenna in 1512, when the allied Spanish and papal forces were defeated by the renowned Gaston de Foix, Dumolard, one of his captains, played a conspicuous part. After a gallant charge, by which he had driven back the enemy, he determined to publicly drink the health of his enemy's brave ally, Jacob von Empser, the leader of the 5,000 German lansquenets. Wine was brought upon the field, and, having sat down, each hero filled his goblet. At that moment, while they were in the very act of pledging each other's health, a stranger ball from the enemy's lines killed them both.

Canada's Battleships "Dry."

The Canadian navy has just taken a step unprecedented in its history. The two cruisers Rainbow and Niobe are to be teetotal men-of-war, contrary to all marine traditions.

Grog has always been a part of the standard ration, being a concoction of one part rum to three parts water, but no such luxury is to be permitted on the two ships above mentioned. In the old days—in fact, down to 1830—the daily allowance to each man was a gallon of ale and half a pint of rum. The quantity has been greatly modified, but it certainly never entered any tar's head that the time was coming for total abstinence.

For Catarrh

Medicine Free in Every Case Where It Fails to Relieve

Neglect or pessimism, we believe, is the greatest enemy the public has to contend with when applied to the loss or recovery of health. Practically every case of consumption might have been cured if hope had been maintained and proper treatment had been resorted to at the first symptom of the disease. Until the advanced stage is reached consumption is curable. Catarrh is responsible, we believe, for many cases of consumption. It is about catarrh we want to talk to you to-day, incidentally consumption, since the two are so closely allied.

We have a medicine made from a prescription of one of the most successful catarrh specialists known. We believe it is positively without an equal. We are so satisfied that we are right, that we will supply the medicine free in every instance where it is used according to directions for a reasonable length of time, should it fail to give satisfaction in every particular. We want every one to try this medicine at our risk. There are no conditions attached to our offer. We put the user under no obligation to us whatever.

The medicine we want you to try is Rexall Mucu-Tone. It is a catarrh remedy that goes direct to the seat of trouble. It is carried by the blood to every part of the system. It purifies and enriches the blood, tones up the mucous cells, and brings about a condition of health and strength that tends to prevent the germs of consumption from getting a start. Besides this, Rexall Mucu-Tone is a wonderful appetizer, digestive aid and flesh builder. Its good effects are often felt from the very first dose. It is one of the largest and most satisfactory selling medicines that we have ever had anything to do with.

We know so much of the great good that it has done that we personally back it up with our reputation and money, which fact should be ample guarantee to satisfy anybody. Rexall Mucu-Tone comes in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. We urge you to try it. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Peterborough only at our store. The Rexall Store, H. at our store. The Rexall Store, corner George and Charlotte streets.

She Didn't Want Tickets.

There was a number of ticket buyers in the theater lobby. Following the unwritten law, they had formed in line and were being waited upon according to precedence. Suddenly an overdressed woman, ignoring the line, rushed up to the window and tried to engage the attention of the box office man.

The box office man shook his head at her. "Madam," he said, with some emphasis, "you must take your place at the foot of the line."

"Foot of the line!" she repeated. "Nonsense!"

"You will not get any tickets," declared the man, "until all these people in the line have been served."

"Tickets!" replied the woman. "I don't want any tickets. All I want is change for a dime. Two nickels will do. Thanks."

And she hastily rustled out.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

PALE, ANAEMIC GIRLS

The languid, semi-invalid girl is no longer popular. Firm flesh, rounded form and a healthy glow to the complexion are the results of using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. STORE PHOTO

MANY PERSONS do not realize to what extent they benefit by being able to select and purchase their Wall Papers, Rugs, Draperies and Curtains all at one store and all on one floor. We have heard this discussed many a time by women who were particular in their selections of home fittings and furnishings and invariably the decision was in favour of the above store. It saves a woman worry and overcomes a great amount of indecision on her part. Everything points to the departmental store in these respects—

Goods purchased together match in colour & pattern;
Easy selection without much worry;
No taking samples to other stores to compare;
Expert salesmen who can advise wisely to the benefit of the customer;
And others too numerous to mention.

Our salesmen work out colour and pattern schemes together and create new ideas which they are pleased to impart to our patrons. The above cut is a reproduction of a photo, of a corner on our third floor, showing a display of Wall Paper, Net Curtains and Drapes, also the new "Windowphanie" or stained glass substitute.

Select your Homefurnishings and fittings at a store where you can get the best selection, without the worry of going from store to store to compare patterns and match colours, and where you are away from the noise and bustle of the main floors—our Third Floor Dept.

A GERMAN NOBLEMAN PAYS HEAVY PENANCE EXILED FROM FATHERLAND

The Vancouver World says: An exile from his beloved fatherland through the avarice of relatives a German baron, whose family stands high among the aristocrats of the kaiser's empire, arrived in Vancouver yesterday and is declared to have left for Alberta, there to erect a home for himself in the Peace River country.

Baron Frederick Gunter van Saalfeldt—his real name—would probably take up too much space on the guest register at the Dunsmuir. At any rate the German nobleman, who is said to have suffered sufficient persecution to worry twenty men, put down a very common and popular American cognomen and opposite it "Seattle, Wash."

Because he repeated in public a scandalous story regarding a prince of royal blood, a near relative of the German Emperor, many years ago, the baron was thrust from his home in Berlin, ostracised by his former friends and eventually thrown into an asylum for the insane. Here, the man claims, an attempt was made to poison him. When he escaped after nearly two years in the madhouse, the papers of Europe said much of the affair though the story was censored within the empire by the imperial authorities.

Spirited away to Antwerp through the assistance rendered by members of the Radical party, the young man made his way to South America, landing at Rio Janeiro.

An exciting series of experiences among the Latin-Americans satisfied Baron von Saalfeldt that the northern hemisphere might have something more congenial to offer him.

He came to Texas, drifted north and landed in Cobalt, Ont. Later he prospected in Porcupine. His mining ventures turned out badly however and he came west.

Since his escape from the keepers of the Berlin insane institution the baron has followed many trades. He made his way for a time in the United States repairing pipe organs. He rode the range between times and once in Seattle is declared to have conducted hypnotic performances.

"Those Seattle newspapermen have given me more publicity that I can well do with," he stated to The World. "It is true that I have had several remarkable experiences. I do not wish to discuss them, though I have told them so often. That I committed lese majeste in Germany is also quite true and I have suffered for it. I wish you would kindly not make the thing too prominent for I hope to live peace fully on the prairies."

Counsel (cross-examining): "Your chief occupation is drinking, isn't it?"
Witness: "That's my business."
Counsel: "Yes, but have you any other?"

THE VERSATILITY OF MARGARET ANGLIN SHOWN

Under the heading of Margaret Anglin, an Artistic Genius," the Toronto Mail and Empire has the following to say of the famous actress who appears at the Grand to-morrow night in "Green Stocsings".

Margaret Anglin has in the last year amply demonstrated for all practical purposes an amazing artistic versatility. No one who has followed her career in that time can doubt this statement. A year ago she was playing Helena Richie, a role eminently suited to her then known powers, but limited in its scope, since it was similar to many emotional characters created by her in years gone by and in all of which she had succeeded admirably. So similar, however, were they that people began to be too familiar with her method, and the question was being asked: "When will she give us a change?"

In the early summer the University of California honoured her with an invitation to produce and appear in a revival of the "Antigone" of Sophocles. In the soft stillness of an ideal Californian summer night Margaret Anglin and her colleagues revived the greatest tragedy of Sophocles, and for two and one-half hours the audience sat spellbound as Miss Anglin and the others revealed the beauties of the dramatist's immortal poetry. The actress at one single stroke had demonstrated herself to be a great tragedienne. "Antigone" was a far cry from "The Awakening of Helena Richie," but Miss Anglin reached in safety from one to the other.

Recently she has turned to another branch of her art, and has successfully proved herself to be a great deal of a comedienne; that is, according to the out-of-town reports of her performance in the new comedy "Green Stockings."

But an actress who, in the short space of twelve months, can reveal her talents successfully in three such diverse and opposite characers as Helena Richie, Antigone and Celia Faraday must be possessed of something bearing close relationship to genius. The accomplishment of such an experiment cannot fail to enlist admiration.

Splendid Turnout At Drill Of 57th Regiment

The 57th Regiment made a fine showing at the weekly drill last night and had a splendid turnout, there being only one man less than last Tuesday night (265). A large number of new recruits were added to the Regiment. Both the Bugle and Brass bands were in attendance, and rendered splendid music for the occasion. The commanding officers gave the different companies great encouragement in their work at drilling. The new recruits are getting on admirably, and the officers expect that at the close of the drill season Peterborough will have one of the finest regiments of any city of its size.

The orders for the week are as follows:

Headquarters, Peterborough,
April 18th, 1911.

Orders by the officer commanding 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers:

No. 1. Detail of duty for the week, leaving 25th April, 1911. Captain for the week, Capt. Hounsell; next for duty, Capt. McLean. Subaltern for the week, Lieutenant Hall; next for duty, Lieut. Carruthers.

No. 2. The following are struck off the strength of the Regiment: B. Co. Corp. H. B. Simmons, Corp. F. Degan; Privates, C. W. Downs, J. McLeur, and Wm. Hall, discharged April 11th, 1911.

No. 3. Leave of absence from parade is hereby granted to Lieut. G. S. Cameron and Lieut. J. Gemmell.

No. 4. The commanding officer has been pleased to transfer Sergt. Metherall from G Co. to B Co., and to promote G. Henderson to be a corporal, provisionally, in E Co. vice Corp G. B. Jackson, discharged.

D. WALKER,
Captain, Adjutant.

NEW AMBULANCE

A fine new private ambulance was received by D. Belleghem & Sons today, as a further addition to their already up-to-date equipment. No expense or pains has been spared by the builders in providing for the comfort of the sick, in the construction of this ambulance, which is one of the finest, by long odds, that has ever been seen in this city.

The interior is finished in a panel design, with quartered oak, while the windows are of British bevel plate, electric lights, with storage battery, are also provided, evidently the idea of the builders of this vehicle was to get away from the old-fashioned, gloomy-looking, black-finished type of ambulance, and produce one that would present a more cheery looking aspect. Needless to say they have seen very successful in this respect. Other important features are the air cushions and pillows; also speaking tube from patient to driver. One very pleasing idea in connection with this new ambulance is the exterior finish, which is of a steel gray colour, with a centre panel, in which is inscribed the words "Private Ambulance," and the customary cross, the latter being done in gold. Other exterior features worthy of note are the canopy top, continuous song on dashboard, and the drop axle, which brings the body of the ambulance nearer the ground than it would be otherwise possible to do.

Sudden Death At Hastings

Mr. William Lamey Passes Away From Heart Failure

Special to The Examiner

HASTINGS, APRIL 17.—Great sympathy is everywhere felt for Mr. and Mrs. J. Lamey and family in the great sorrow which has come into their home, caused by the sudden death of their son William on Sunday morning last. Deceased was in apparent good health on Saturday and retired as usual, having spent the evening around town, but on being called the following morning, and failing to respond, his mother went up to his room, only to find, to her dismay, that life was extinct. It is supposed that death was due to heart failure. The remains were taken to the R. C. church on Tuesday and from thence to the R. C. cemetery, where interment was made. Mr. Lamey, of the Union Bank staff, is a brother of the deceased.

Friday, being a holiday, all the business places were closed.

Rev. C. W. Barrett was in Westwood on Sunday, supplying the pulpit of the Methodist church in the interests of the educational work of the district.

Rev. Mr. Richards spent Sunday in Hastings.

Miss Gertie Huycke, of Peterborough, took the soprano in a duet in the Methodist church on Sunday evening, her rendering of it being very pleasing.

Mr. Mikel, principal of the Public school, is spending a holiday at his home in Castleton.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, of Keene, have been guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Carter, town.

Some of the farmers in this vicinity have commenced ploughing and expect to be are sowing in the course of a very few days.

Another very aged resident of Asphodel has passed away in the person of Mr. M. Healy, who had reached the ripe age of 97 years. The funeral was held on Monday, interment taking place in the R. C. cemetery here.

Mr. Peter Gillespie left recently for Calgary with the intention of locating. Miss Gillespie and children expect to join him during the summer.

Mr. E. Richardson spent Sunday at the home of his sister, Mrs. Robt. Collins.

Mr. Kenneth Burgess, of Norwood, gave us a call on Thursday.

The W. M. S. of the Methodist church held their annual meeting on Thursday afternoon, when the officers were elected for the ensuing year.

Miss M. Stevenson is spending a few days with friends out of town.

We are sorry to learn that Miss Gladys Stevenson is confined to her room suffering from an attack of la grippe.

Mrs. McKelvie, of Campbellford, spent Thursday at the home of Mrs. Hermiston.

The Hastings waters are to have a new boat for the coming season, Messrs. Lynch and Gibson having purchased the 'Calumet' from Mr. Boyd of Bobcaygeon. The owners purpose putting the boat to general use, in any way in which money can be made out of it. She is expected to arrive in Hastings in the near future.

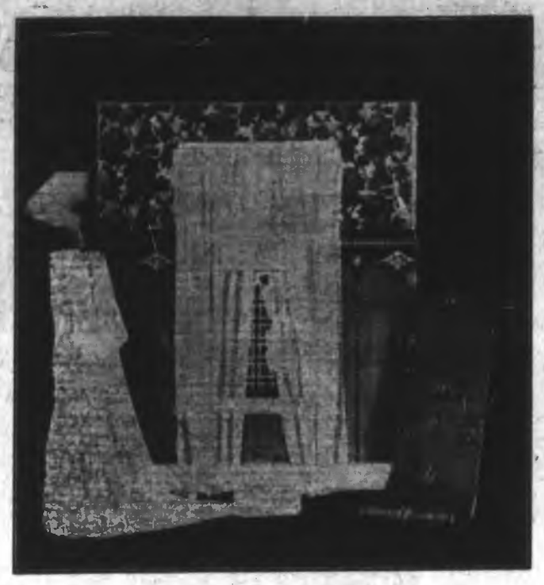
From Our Own

STORE PHOTO



MANY PERSONS do not realize to what extent they benefit by being able to select and purchase their Wall Papers, Rugs, Draperies and Curtains all at one store and all on one floor. We have heard this discussed many a time by women who were particular in their selections of home fittings and furnishings and invariably the decision was in favour of the above store. It saves a woman worry and overcomes a great amount of indecision on her part. Everything points to the departmental store in these respects—

Goods purchased together match in colour & pattern;
Easy selection without much worry;
No taking samples to other stores to compare;
Expert salesmen who can advise wisely to the benefit of the customer;
And others too numerous to mention.

Our salesmen work out colour and pattern schemes together and create new ideas which they are pleased to impart to our patrons. The above cut is a reproduction of a photo, of a corner on our third floor, showing a display of Wall Paper, Net Curtains and Drapes, also the new "Windowphanie" or stained glass substitute.

Select your Homefurnishings and fittings at a store where you can get the best selection, without the worry of going from store to store to compare patterns and match colours, and where you are away from the noise and bustle of the main floors—our Third Floor Dept.

A GERMAN NOBLEMAN PAYS HEAVY PENANCE EXILED FROM FATHERLAND

The Vancouver World says: An exile from his beloved fatherland through the avarice of relatives a German baron, whose family stands high among the aristocrats of the kaiser's empire, arrived in Vancouver yesterday and is declared to have left for Alberta, there to enter a home for himself in the Peace River country.

Baron Frederick Gunter van Saalfeldt—his real name—would probably take up too much space on the guest register at the Dunsmuir. At any rate the German nobleman, who is said to have suffered sufficient persecution to worry twenty men, put down a very common and popular American cognomen and opposite it "Seattle, Wash."

Because he repeated in public a scandalous story regarding a prince of royal blood, a near relative of the German Emperor, many years ago, the baron was thrust from his home in Berlin, ostracized by his former friends and eventually thrown into an asylum for the insane. Here, the man claims, an attempt was made to poison him. When he escaped after nearly two years in the madhouse, the papers of Europe said much of the affair though the story was censored within the empire by the imperial authorities.

Spirited away to Antwerp through the assistance rendered by members of the Radical party, the young man made his way to South America, landing at Rio Janeiro.

An exciting series of experiences among the Latin-Americans satisfied Baron von Saalfeldt that the northern hemisphere might have something more congenial to offer him.

He came to Texas, drifted north and landed in Cobalt, Ont. Later he prospected in Porcupine. His mining ventures turned out badly however and he came west.

Since his escape from the keepers of the Berlin insane institution the baron has followed many trades. He made his way for a time in the United States repairing pipe organs. He rode the range between times and once in Seattle is declared to have conducted hypnotic performances.

"Those Seattle newspapermen have given me more publicity that I can well do with," he stated to The World. "It is true that I have had several remarkable experiences. I do not wish to discuss them, though I have told them so often. That I committed lese majeste in Germany is also quite true and I have suffered for it. I wish you would kindly not make the thing too prominent for I hope to live peace fully on the prairies."

Counsel (cross-examining): "Your chief occupation is drinking, isn't it?"
Witness: "That's my business."
Counsel: "Yes, but have you any other?"

THE VERSATILITY OF MARGARET ANGLIN SHOWN

Under the heading of Margaret Anglin, an Artistic Genius," the Toronto Mail and Empire has the following to say of the famous actress who appears at the Grand to-morrow night in "Green Stockings".

Margaret Anglin has in the last year amply demonstrated for all practical purposes an amazing artistic versatility. No one who has followed her career in that time can doubt this statement. A year ago she was playing Helena Richie, a role eminently suited to her then known powers, but limited in its scope, since it was similar to many emotional characters created by her in years gone by and in all of which she had succeeded admirably. So similar, however, were they that people began to be too familiar with her method, and the question was being asked: "When will she give us a change?"

In the early summer the University of California honoured her with an invitation to produce and appear in a revival of the "Antigone" of Sophocles. In the soft stillness of an ideal Californian summer night Margaret Anglin and her colleagues revived the greatest tragedy of Sophocles, and for two and one-half hours the audience sat spellbound as Miss Anglin and the others revealed the beauties of the dramatist's immortal poetry. The actress at one single stroke had demonstrated herself to be a great tragedienne. "Antigone" was a far cry from "The Awakening of Helena Richie," but Miss Anglin reached in safety from one to the other.

Recently she has turned to another branch of her art, and has successfully proved herself to be a great deal of a comedienne; that is, according to the out-of-town reports of her performance in the new comedy "Green Stockings."

But an actress who, in the short space of twelve months, can reveal her talents successfully in three such diverse and opposite characers as Helena Richie, Antigone and Celia Faraday must be possessed of something bearing close relationship to genius. The accomplishment of such an experiment cannot fail to enlist admiration.

Splendid Turnout At Drill Of 57th Regiment

The 57th Regiment made a fine showing at the weekly drill last night and had a splendid turnout, there being only one man less than last Tuesday night (265). A large number of new recruits were added to the Regiment. Both the Bugle and Brass bands were in attendance, and rendered splendid music for the occasion. The commanding officers gave the different companies great encouragement in their work at drilling. The new recruits are getting on admirably, and the officers expect that at the close of the drill season Peterborough will have one of the finest regiments of any city of its size.

The orders for the week are as follows:

Headquarters, Peterborough,
April 18th, 1911.

No. 1. Detail of duty for the week leaving 25th April, 1911. Captain for the week, Capt. Hounsell; next for duty, Capt. McLean. Subaltern for the week, Lieutenant Hall; next for duty, Lieut. Carruthers.

No. 2. The following are struck off the strength of the Regiment: B. Co. Corp. H. B. Simmons, Corp. F. Degan; Privates, C. W. Downs, J. McLeur, and Wm. Hall, discharged April 11th, 1911.

No. 3. Leave of absence from parade is hereby granted to Lieut. G. S. Cameron and Lieut. J. Gemmell.

No. 4. The commanding officer has been pleased to transfer Sergt. Metheral from G Co. to B Co., and to promote G. Henderson to be a corporal, provisionally, in E Co. vice Corp G. B. Jackson, discharged.

D. WALKER,
Captain, Adjutant.

NEW AMBULANCE

A fine new private ambulance was received by D. Belleghem & Sons today, as a further addition to their already up-to-date equipment. No expense or pains has been spared by the builders in providing for the comfort of the sick, in the construction of this ambulance, which is one of the finest, by long odds, that has ever been seen in this city.

The interior is finished in a panel design, with quartered oak, while the windows are of British bevel plate, electric lights, with storage battery, are also provided, evidently the idea of the builders of this vehicle was to get away from the old-fashioned, gloomy-looking, black-finished type of ambulance, and produce one that would present a more cheery looking aspect. Needless to say they have been very successful in this respect. Other important features are the air cushions and pillows; also speaking tube from patient to driver. One very pleasing idea in connection with this new ambulance is the exterior finish, which is of a steel gray colour, with a centre panel, in which is inscribed the words "Private Ambulance," and the customary cross, the latter being done in gold. Other exterior features worthy of note are the canopy top, continuous gong on dashboard, and the drop axle, which brings the body of the ambulance nearer the ground than it would be otherwise possible to do.

Sudden Death At Hastings

Mr. William Lamey Passes Away From Heart Failure

Special to The Examiner

HASTINGS, APRIL 17.—Great sympathy is everywhere felt for Mr. and Mrs. J. Lamey and family in the great sorrow which has come into their home, caused by the sudden death of their son William on Sunday morning last. Deceased was in apparent good health on Saturday and retired as usual, having spent the evening around town, but on being called the following morning, and failing to respond, his mother went up to his room, only to find, to her dismay, that life was extinct. It is supposed that death was due to heart failure. The remains were taken to the R. C. church on Tuesday and from thence to the R. C. cemetery, where interment was made. Mr. Lamey, of the Union Bank staff, is a brother of the deceased.

Friday, being a holiday, all the business places were closed.

Rev. C. W. Barrett was in Westwood on Sunday, supplying the pulpit of the Methodist church in the interests of the educational work of the district.

Rev. Mr. Richards spent Sunday in Hastings.

Miss Gertie Huycke, of Peterborough, took the soprano in a duet in the Methodist church on Sunday evening, her rendering of it being very pleasing.

Mr. Mikel, principal of the Public school, is spending a holiday at his home in Castleton.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, of Keene, have been guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Carter, town.

Some of the farmers in this vicinity have commenced ploughing and expect to be see sowing in the course of a very few days.

Another very aged resident of Asphodel has passed away in the person of Mr. M. Healy, who had reached the ripe age of 97 years. The funeral was held on Monday, interment taking place in the R. C. cemetery here.

Mr. Peter Gillespie left recently for Calgary with the intention of locating. Miss Gillespie and children expect to join him during the summer.

Mr. E. Richardson spent Sunday at the home of his sister, Mrs. Robt. Collins.

Mr. Kenneth Burgess, of Norwood, gave us a call on Thursday.

The W. M. S. of the Methodist church held their annual meeting on Thursday afternoon, when the officers were elected for the ensuing year.

We are sorry to learn that Miss Gladys Stevenson is confined to her room suffering from an attack of la grippe.

Mrs. McKelvie, of Campbellford, spent Thursday at the home of Mrs. Hermiston.

The Hastings waters are to have a new boat for the coming season, Messrs. Lynch and Gibson having purchased the 'Calumet' from Mr. Boyd of Bobcaygeon. The owners purpose putting the boat to general use, in any way in which money can be made out of it. She is expected to arrive in Hastings in the near future.

In Three Accidents!

It would seem that Zam-Buk, the famous healing balm we hear so highly spoken of everywhere, is particularly useful in the family circle. A report sent by Mrs. E. Davey, 786 Elice Ave., Winnipeg, will illustrate this. She says: "My little boy, of three, while playing, fell from a high verandah, cutting his forehead badly. Instead of calling a doctor who would undoubtedly have put in a number of stitches, I bathed the wound well and applied Zam-Buk. The little fellow, although suffering keenly, soon had relief from his pain. In the course of three weeks, by applying Zam-Buk daily, the wound was nicely healed. Since then I have also used Zam-Buk for a boil which came on my cheek, and which proved very painful and looked unsightly. Zam-Buk soon drew the boil to a head and it then quickly banished it.

"Another time my baby was scalded on her left thigh and calf of leg with boiling water. Directly it was done I thought to use Zam-Buk, and spreading some on lint I wrapped up the baby's limb. Next morning she rested much easier and I applied a fresh bandage with Zam-Buk. I kept this treatment up daily, and was rewarded by seeing a great improvement each time I dressed the wound. In a very short space of time the scalds were all nicely healed.

"I cannot recommend this wonderful healing preparation too highly for family use, and I have such great faith in its healing powers that my house is never without a box."

For all skin injuries and diseases, piles, eczema, salt rheum and face sores, Zam-Buk is absolutely unequalled. 50c. box all druggists and stores, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Try Zam-Buk Soap too! Only 25c. tablet.

DELINE MURDER TRIAL COMMENCED THIS MORNING

would be a difficult road after night.'

"You did not go near the body when you first went to the house, so you can't say that she was dead at that time."

"No."

"That evening some person suggested to Deline that he had better lie down and rest!"

"No, not unless I forgot it."

"You did not hear Mr. McMullen suggest it?"

"No."

"But he did lie down?"

"Yes."

"You helped to wash the body next day?"

"Yes."

"Did you know the Delines long?"

"No. They just moved there in the fall, and I did not know them at all."

"But you knew that they were in poor circumstances, and that Mrs. Deline went in her bare feet, with scarcely any clothing all last summer?"

"Yes."

"He worked by the month with the farmers, did he not?"

"Yes. He was working for Mr. Buchanan then."

Samuel Newall was the next witness called. He was examined by Attorney R. E. Wood.

"You lived near the prisoner?"

"Yes."

Mr. Newall said that in conversation with the prisoner, he had spoken of the affair on the day after the funeral. He spoke of selling his furniture, saying that if he got married again, he might buy new furniture. Newall told the prisoner that it was him that did the deed. The prisoner just shook his head, but did not answer.

"Where were you with Deline when the conversation took place?"

"I can't think of the people's name. I bought a field of hay and employed Deline to help me."

"What was the conversation?"

"We were talking about girls we knew when we were young. He started the conversation."

"You are a married man?"

"Yes."

"Any children?"

"No, sir."

"You volunteered this information to the Crown officers?"

"Yes."

"The suspicion was written in your mind—you would hang a man for his looks?"

"No, but his looks made me suspicious."

Magistrate Edmison took the box. He spoke of being at Havelock at the time of the murder.

Mrs. Margaret Newall, wife of Samuel Newall, was prevented by serious illness from being present as a witness.

Constable Williams was sworn. He was examined by Mr. Meredith.

"Did you examine prisoner's trousers?"

"Yes."

"What were they like?"

"They were covered with human filth."

"What did you do with the trousers?"

"The next morning I took them to the coroner."

"Did you have any talk with the prisoner before the arrest?

"Yes."

"State the conversation!"

"I asked him if the clothes he had on were the same he had on at the time of the murder. He said he had a different shirt and smock. I asked him if they were the same trousers, and he said: Oh, no; the others are in the cellar. I arrested him the next day."

"Did you caution him?"

"I told him that anything he said might be used as evidence against him."

"Did he say anything?"

"He said he did not care, that he did not kill his wife. He said he did not go near her when she was dead."

"You were present when the body was exhumed?"

"Yes, but I did not look at the body."

"Later did you find any cord on the foot path?"

"Yes; here it is." (Cord produced.)

Mr. O'Connel, the defence lawyer, then cross-examined the witness.

Dr. Kindred, coroner, was next called.

"You live at Havelock?"

"Yes, sir."

"You were at deceased's place next day after the occurrence?"

"Yes, I got there between 7 and 8 o'clock. I viewed the body then."

"Where did you find the body?"

"In the shed lying on its back."

"How was the body clothed?"

"An old flannel wrapper and a little shirt."

"Was there anything under her?"

"Yes, an old coat."

"What were the wounds like?"

"There was a wound over the eye about half an inch in diameter. A fall would do it. The skin was knocked off. There was some skin knocked off the shoulder about the same. There were some scratches on face and cheeks."

"Any other marks?"

"There was a mark on the left elbow."

"Any others?"

"A mark around each wrist."

"What would cause that?"

"A rope or a large string."

"Were there any other marks?"

"Some little abrasions."

"Were you afterwards shown the pants?"

"Yes."

"What did you find?"

"The legs of the trousers were covered with human excreta, which looked the same as that on and around the body."

"Where was the prisoner?"

"Outside."

"Did he say anything?"

"When I came out he asked me what I thought of things. He appeared to be weeping and bemoaning the loss of his wife, but yet was looking at me through his fingers."

"Did he say anything else?"

"He said when he came home he looked out into the shed and saw his wife there and got afraid and ran to the neighbours."

The before mentioned cord was produced.

"Would that cause the injury to the wrists."

"Yes."

The defence lawyer then cross questioned witness, without eliciting any new points.

BOYHOOD'S OBSERVATIONS

Down the old East lane I walk,
O'er the woodland path I tread;
I hear faint whisperings overhead,
Rustling leaves that gently talk.

They murmur, Never go astray,
To use the gifts so kindly given.
They give a nearer view of Heaven
And speak of broad humanity.

I slowly walk the old ash tree
That spans the little rivulet;
Thoughts not ripe in knowledge yet,
Mind raised high in ecstacy.

Down the old line fence I stroll
That parts our neighbor's land and ours,
The feeling, this a gladsome hour,
Told, by whispering of the soul.

Maples here and branches high,
A scene that I have ne'er forgot,
There the old black syrup pot,
Blacker when the summer's nigh.

On the fence I change my load,
I watheh blithe Charlie guide his plow,
I can see the picture now,
Before me lies the old stone road.

There Watty drives the lowing cows
As I reach the hill's round dome,
The lake in richer, grander tone,
Here and there a timber scow.

Eastward lie the serpent mounds,
Beside them, peas not in the stack;
To-morrow, I will get the sack"
This, Jimmie to himself, expounds.

My vision now is cut away
By mist; yet I am satisfied,
The scene to me is magnified
With glory in the winding bay.

DELINE SENTENCED TO LIFE IMPRISONMENT PLEADED GUILTY TO MANSLAUGHTER CHARGE

Murder Case Came to a Sudden Termination This Morning Owing to Decision of the Prisoner to Change His Plea.

THE JUDGE'S REMARKS

The murder charge against Hugh Deline of Belmont Township, came to a sudden termination this morning, when, immediately after the opening of Court, Mr. Justice Teetzel announced that the prisoner and his counsel, in view of the evidence offered, had decided to change the plea of not guilty of murder to guilty of manslaughter. The prisoner was then sentenced to life imprisonment in Kingston Penitentiary by His Lordship, who most severely condemned the actions of Deline, and characterized the case as one of the most disgusting ever brought befor e the courts of the country.

Deline showed no signs of emotion, but walked out of court as briskly as if he were gaining his freedom.

When Court was opened this morning, Mr. Justice Teetzel addressed the Jury, advising them of the fact that in view of the evidence that had been taken, the prisoner and his counsel desired to withdraw the plea of not guilty of murder to the plea of guilty of manslaughter. His Lordship stated that the prisoner, in committing the acts of violence upon his wife, knew, or ought to have known, that it would cause her death. He said that the difficulty might be in this case, to satisfy the Jury that he ought to have known, so that his Lordship thought that the prisoner's counsel acted wisely. He then instructed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty of murder, but guilty of manslaughter.

Mr. O'Connell, in making a plea for leniency, said that the prisoner came from a remote part of the country, where the people were of the very lowest type, where the people had little or no sense of morals. He was living in poverty, and his idea of proper things was very meagre. Mr. O'Connell touched on the weak intellect which the man possessed, stating that it was so low and degraded that the prisoner was on the border of insanity. Consulting the experts of the Crown, he had found they had a very poor report of his intellectual state. The prisoner's mother was living in exactly the same state as the prisoner had lived, and she was dependent on him for support. For the sake of the two little children, he asked his Lordship to act as leniently as he saw fit.

"You have pleaded guilty to a very serious crime," said his Lordship. "I think that the course taken by your counsel was a very proper one, as the verdict must have been at least for the crime you have pleaded guilty to, and possibly for the greater crime. You have committed outrageous cruelties upon your wife, and, I believe, according to the evidence, that you have been committing most abominable offences upon her. You bound your wife's hands and was struggling with her to accomplish the abominable crime, and as a result death followed. I think your counsel is right that your morals must be very low. The beasts of the field would not do as you did, and I think that probably this is the most disgusting case and offence that ever came before the courts of the country. While I may sympathize with your aged mother and children, I must impose upon you the penalty you deserve, and it will be a warning and an example to those of your class I doubt that your freedom would be of any benefit to your mother or children, and you certainly are to be pitied for your lack of morals, and your intellectual state. You should be confined under the care of the state; you should not be at large. Human life must not be exposed to the risk of the conduct of such a man as you, and, therefore, the proper sentence upon you, with regard to the crime you have committed and the public safety, is that you should be confined during the balance of your life, and until Medical authorities will allow you your liberty."

His Lordship then passed sentence.

Yesterday's session.

The cross examination of Dr. Kindred, the coroner, was proceeded with when the court resumed, after luncheon yesterday, no new facts being brought out.

To Mr. Meredith, the witness said that death was due to a shock, caused by a struggle.

Dr. Ford was called and read the report of the post mortem examination.

To Mr. O'Connell he said that there were no marks on the body that would cause death. He concurred in the opinion of Dr. Kindred, that death was caused by shock, and described shock as a constitutional condition, such as a great loss of blood, or anything that affected the whole system or any external impulse that had a profound effect upon the nervous system. In answer to Mr. Meredith the witness said that he was prepared to say that death was due to suffocation.

HUGH DELINE,
Who Was This Morning Sentenced by Mr. Justice Teetzel to Life Imprisonment in Kingston Penitentiary For Manslaughter.

Mrs. McQuaid, a neighbour, gave evidence similar to other witnesses heard, as to the condition of Mrs. Deline's body, which she had helped to wash. She stated that Deline had talked of his wife and had gone in to see the body after it was prepared.

During the cross-examination the witness said that Mrs. Deline's wrists looked as if they had been tied by a small rope and that there were also marks on her face, as if she had been hit by something.

Wm. McMillan, another neighbour, told of a conversation he had with Deline on the night in question. He said he met Deline outside the house and the prisoner said that he had torn his trousers and asked witness to go in and get him another pair, which he did. Deline told the witness that he would not go in and see his wife.

Medical Testimony.

Dr. Connor of Queen's University, Professor of Pathology, was the next witness. He testified to having performed the second post-mortem examination on the body of Mrs. Deline forty days after death, and gave the result of the finding at considerable length. To Mr. Meredith he said that death was caused by suffocation produced by shock, and that sodomy must have been practised on the woman for a considerable time.

Mr. O'Connell conducted an exhaustive cross-examination, dealing particularly with the reasons the witness had come to regarding the conclusion that death was caused by suffocation. Dr. Connor described the characteristics in the heart, lungs, and brain, which led him to conclude that suffocation was the cause of death, and admitted there were certain characteristics generally found which were absent in this case.

The counsel for the defence also questioned the witness along the lines of death being possible from goitre, but Dr. Connor explained that he did not think this probable in the case at issue.

One Reason for Our Success We Emphasize Accuracy

Every pair of Eye-glasses that goes through our establishment is subjected to the most careful examination of even the smallest details. Every lens is neutralized, measured and centered by two Registered Doctors of Optics, graduates of the Philadelphia College of Optics. In addition to the usual methods for fitting eyes, we add to accuracy the features of the Optometer. No matter how accurately the lenses may be ground and centered, if the pupillary width of the glasses does not correspond with that of the eyes, there will be strain upon the interior muscles of the eyes, and consequently discomfort. We are more particular in adjusting glasses to every detail in order that we give greatest relief to the eyes and most perfect workmanship to the glasses. This is one reason for our success.

HELP THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Attention is directed to the report of a meeting of the executive of the Peterborough Horticultural Society last night, as presented in our news columns. This report affords evidence that the directors of the society have taken on the activity that marks the spring season in the realms of nature and human action. The report of the special committee appointed to suggest means of increasing the membership, contains one or two valuable hints outside this object. The addition a ladies' auxiliary, is a most important improvement. Woman's natural love for beauty—perhaps an explanation of her fondness for the men—their instinctive tidiness and passion for cleanliness, will make them a valuable auxiliary to the work of the society. There are other important suggestions which, if acted upon, will greatly promote the beauty of the city. But all these will be in vain so far as the street aspect of civic beauty is concerned, without the co-operation of the City Council for the time being. Unless the latter gives its cooperation and encouragement, the work of civic beautification will continue to be up hill work. The ambition and zeal of citizens will be dampened and discouraged if their work is not assisted and results protected from the vandalism that does so much to destroy the beauty of private premises and pulblic places. Do not omit to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest the report of the meeting held last night.

THE 'BAGGAGE SMASHER' NEXT

It seems that there will always be work for the Dominion Railway Commission—always dragons to slay. Now there is a demand that the Commission tackle the "baggage smasher," who should, figuratively, be treated as he treats the unfortunate luggage that comes under his sway. Any trunk, short of being steel clad, hardly lasts the second or third journey. The railway companies are as much bound to carry baggage safely as to carry safely the passenger to whom it belongs. If the latter were treated as his boxes are treated, manslaughter would be a commoner crime than it is now. The passenger's ticket covers his baggage which should be treated with due respect. Of late, some of the railways have provided a slide for the handling of heavy baggage, but even with this a heavy trunk, allowed to slide with the momentum of its weight, is apt to "come to grief," when it strikes a concrete platform at the bottom. The Railway Commission is a public benefactor above almost any other public body, and it can, if it chooses, minimise, or remove, the destructive activities of the "baggage smasher". The Commission successfully handled the excessive charges of the express companies. And they should successfully handle the problem of preventing the destruction of the property of travellers, which amounts, in the aggregate, to many times the amount of a large overcharge in express rates. Canadians are great travellers—liberal and numerous patrons of the railways—and they should not be fined, in the form of semi-malicious destruction of their travelling impedimenta.

OPPOSITION OBSTRUCTION.

It is stated by the Toronto News, on grounds given for the inference, that the latest policy of the Conservative Opposition in parliament, in regard to the reciprocity agreement, is obstruction—with a view of delaying the adoption of the agreement beyond, thepresent session. This may easily be the case, incredible as such a course would be for a political party having the smallest endowment of, even home, sense. The Opposition has pretty well boxed the tactical compass in adopting and dropping policies in opposition to the agreement. They have either abandoned ground in their several stands or have had the ground cut from under their feet. The annexation cry was raised, loudly at first, but was speedily laughed out of court. The danger to manufacturing interests had a short life, the rumours of competition with fruit growers and farmers was blighted in its early bloom and so on through the schedule. Ostruction will have its day, to be abandoned of demoralised in its turn. This policy is apparently adopted, not that the Opposition loves obstruction more, but Laurier less. The real object seems to be to prevent Sir Wilfrid the glory, and Canada the credit of, his representing Canada at the Coronation. They may succeed in this, for Sir Wilfrid is above everything else the friend of Canada. He believes the reciprocity agreement will be for the benefit of the country and he will stick to his guns, and fight out the agreement, if it takes all summer. He is more patri- Down in the last ditch, the Opposition. The latter is simply seeking to gain a tactical party advantage at the expense of the commercial interests of the country; not to speak of the cost of prolonging a parliamentary session at a great cost. The Opposition feels that, aside from the reproach upon their patriotism, they can safely practise obstruction. The government cannot in a census year bring on an appeal to the people by means of a general election. The census will be followed by a redistribution of seats which will give the west twenty-five or thirty more seats. Down to the last ditch, the Opposition feeling that to prevent the passage of the agreement, by default, so to speak, they can safely resort to obstruction—the last argument by a beaten party—trust to the chapter of accidents to find them a leader they can follow, patch up the rents in the party, and provide a policy before a general election shall come. But the Opposition is reckoning without its host if it hopes that the government will abandon the agreement for the present session, whether or not Sir Wilfrid attends the Coronation and the Imperial Colonial Conference. It may prevent one of the first statesmen of the Empire from giving Canada a representation at the Coronation, worthy of the occasion, but that will not affect the Opposition; its patriotism and loyalty consist too much in the subserviency they can contribute to party profit.

THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES ACT.

The object of the Act is to promote habits of thrift, and to provide all persons, male or female, domiciled in Canada, with a safe and sure plan of making provision for old age at the lowest possible cost. Deposit from time to time in any Money Order Office such sums as you can spare, for which purpose the Postmaster will supply you with a pass book; or you may, if you prefer, remit these amounts direct to the Annuities' Department, in any manner that may best suit your convenience. (If by cheque or money order, this should be drawn ot the order of the Receiver General). Upon your deposits 4 per cent. compound interest will be allowed, and at the age of 55 (which is the earliest age at which an Annuity can begin) or at any later age desired, and, of course, the longer deferred the larger will be your income, such Annuity as the total amount then at your credit will purchase will be paid to you in quarterly instalments so long as you live. A definite amount of Annuity may be secured if specific sums are regularly paid. Should you die before the Annuity is due, all payemtns made will be returned ot your legal representatives with 3 per cent. compound interest; though the same payments will secure for you a larger Annuity if you do not wish to provide for this return.

If you have an amount at your credit in the Post Office Savings Bank, you may have this amount, or such portion of it as you may desire, transferred to the Annuities Department for, or on account of, the purchase of an Annuity.

The minimum Annuity which may be purchased is $50, and the maximum $600. The earliest age at which the purchase may be begun is 5, but it may begin at any age thereafter. To each purchaser a contract or policy is issued, and a provident feature of the system is that there are no penalties or forfeitures. If payments should for any reason, cease, they may be renewed at any time and if arrears are not made up the only effect will be that a smaller Annuity will be secured.

A person over the age of 55 may buy an Immediate Annuity; and a Last Survivor Annuity, Immediate or Deferred, may be purchased by any two persons by a single payment. By paying a little higher rate, all Annuities may be guaranteed for a number of years certain.

About 1,600 persons have availed themselves of the Act, and over $880,000 have been paid into the fund. Every class of the community may be said to be purchasing. Twelve lecturers, or agents, are employed to present the features of the System to the public from the platform and otherwise; and an office staff of eighteen is already necessary to handle the work. You bear no share of this cost, but every cent you pay in is placed at your credit for the purchase of your Annuity.

If you desire any further information on the subject this will be supplied by the Superintendent of Canadian Government Annuities, Ottawa, to whom all letters go free of postage. local Post Office.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

One need not be surprised at the Conservative Opposition adopting a policy of obstructing reciprocity—they are obstructing themselves; they are so tangled up in contradictory policies that they are continually falling over themselves.

The tragedy which has cut off the lives of four members of the North-West Mounted Police force who were to have attended the Coronation is, remarks the Montreal Herald, the saddest event in the recent history of that noble body of men. But the blanks in the Coronation contingent will do more honour to the police than any number of uniformed men could do.

"The chief fomenter of the free trade agitation in the west is the British radical," says the Toronto News. This is a change. The cry has been, says the London Advertiser, that the newcomers from the United States are behind the reciprocity agitation. But the News professes to know the disloyalists are British—and born in Britain at that!

At the opening of Parliament yesterday Sir Wilfrid Laurier "placed upon the table" seventy-seven communications from public bodies, every one of them endorsing the reciprocity agreement. A feature of the memorials in favour of reciprocity is the increased number coming from the labour interests, who are beginning to see that they are promoted by the general prosperity that will be advantage by enlarged trade facilities.

How New Zealand Deals With Problem Of Land Taxation

Such was the term with which Sir Joseph Ward, premier of New Zealand, in an interview yesterday described the method of taxation in vogue in his country during the last twenty years, in which time the government that inaugurated it has had plenty of opportunity of administering it and seeing the effect of its working out on the country at large. Sir Uoseph talked of many other things pertaining to his country in an optimistic manner, including the prospects of Canada-New Zealand trade, and the future population of New Zealand, which he estimated at 30,000,000 people, but when asked about the system of taxation in his country his interest was at once apparent. In detail he described its working out.

"The system of taxation in New Zealand," he said, "is of taxing lands and income—a graduated tax for both The land tax was devised upon the definite plan of preventing the holding of large estates, and graduates slowly from $25,000 to $200,000 upon the unimproved value of the land. We impose no taxation on improvements, either in town or county, that is on dwellings or business premises, farm lands, fences, grasses, cereals, drainage, etc. But the tax is imposed entirely on the unimproved value of the land itself.

"On estates of from $200,000 and upwards we increase the ordinary graduated tax by an additional 25 per cent. for every graduation of $5,000 beyond this $200,000. The result of the system is that in the case of what at one time were estates of large areas, from 50,000 to 300,000 acres, the owners, to escape the extra 25 per cent. of graduated taxation beyond the $200,000, cut up their excesses and sold or leased, as the case may be, to a number of settlers. So that the outcome of the system of taxation on land has been that our taxation in the aggregate has gradually lessened so far as the government is concerned, and brought about a largely increased number of settlers, who are taking the place of the original holder. The bulk of these settlers who acquire farms from the original holders pay comparatively no taxation at all, as we exempt all farm lands from taxation up to $7,500 value.

Dual Objects Served.

"From this you will observe that the system is imposed with a dual object—first, to prevent growth and aggregation of the large estates, an important factor in a country the size of ours, which is about equal to the British Isles in area; and, secondly, it gives the opportunity to men of small means to get on to productive lands, and lands of a productive character give us a system of close settlement

"The result of this system of taxation in New Zealand has also prevented an undesirable concentration of people in the towns and cities. In other words, the tendency of the people has been to radiate from the centres of the country. We have as an out come of it a very well diffused population. To give you an illustration, in two parts of the country, where very large areas of land were held by two owners. In one case one owner held a whole county. To-day, the same land has a population of about 1,500 to 2,000 people upon it. In the other case a railway line was running through one holding of land for fifty miles. This land is now settled with farmers and their families to the number of 1,500.

Government Lands.

"In addition to the system of taxation which induces owners to sell the excesses of their estates to escape the graduated taxation, the government purchases large landed estates throughout the Dominion and cuts it up into small areas of from 100 to 500 acres and sells to the people. This is land of the highest quality, of course, and will run three or four sheep to the acre on a holding of 100 acres, and not only provides a good living but also enables the owners of it to set aside a comfortable sum annually. On the ordinary lands we have set aside for settlement purposes we have put about 110,000 people in a short term of years.

In Power 21 Years.

"This policy of taxation has been in force since 1891," continued Sir Joseph "My party came into power in 1890 and has been in power ever since, and has thus had the opportunity of laying down the policy, administering it on the people, and seeing its results. Speaking generally, the bulk of the people are in favour of it. As to the government lands, no man can acquire more than 400 acres of the first class, 700 of the second and 3,000 of the third. Our system is all with the object of giving the men of small means the opportunity to get ahead."

Boosting Birth Rate.

Referring to income taxation, Sir Joseph said that, as in land, so had they a graduated system for incomes. Every man with an income up to $1,500 was exempted. "We commence to impose the tax at this amount," he said, "and graduate it up. In addition to exempting the man with the income of $1,500 and under, the government igves him assistance in the way of a grant at the birth of each child, and nurse's attention free."

Wealth of the People.

"New Zealand is distinctly an exporting country," said Sir Joseph, turning to the trade of his country. "so far as natural products are concerned, and the value of the exports last year ran into $115,000,000, independent of providing for the necessities of the people. Our population is composed of 1,050,000 whites, 47,000 Maoris and about 30,000 islanders, chiefly of the South Sea tribes. The area of the country is approximately the same as England, Ireland and Scotland and half of Wales.

"The people are doing wonderfully well. The internal and external trade was over a billion dollars last year, a good showing for such a population, but our climate is splendid all the wealth of the people is $3,000,000,000, year round. The total aggregated which works out at about $3,000 per head, making our people the richest in the world in this way of working it out. New Zealand is the wealthiest country per head in the world. The country is very prosperous, and is drawing people naturally. We have not attempted to force immigration; the slower growth appears to us to be the more suitable for a country our size. We have room for easily 30,000,000 people though, and this eventually in time to come will be our population.

"Of our population 98 1-2 per cent. are British or of British origin. We are very strict as to whom we let into our country, and our laws are so stringent in regard to immigration that the eastern nationalities are practically discouraged. We have less than 4,000 Chinese, and this I am able to say is decreasing."

Woman Suffrage.

"We have had woman suffrage in New Zealand for the past seventeen years," replied the premier to a query by The Citizen, "and so far it has not affected the parties in the government in the least. The government in power has had approximately the same majority as it had before the introduction of the system. Many of the people urging the cause thought that the women would vote Conservative, but they seemed to divide with the men in this respect, about the same number supporting each party as was the case in elections before women had the ballot. It practically meant doubling the vote, that was all. Our laws do not admit of a woman standing for parliament, though."

"How has woman suffrage affected the country, then?"

"Where it seems to have brought the greatest good was in social and domestic matters and in the protection of infant life, the securing to married women, who had been deserted by their husbands, of legal conditions that protect them and prevent one-sided treatment. They have also encouraged the cause of temperance reform to an extent. Women attend political meetings the same as men, and this has the effect of making the meetings more decorus. In all the meetings I have years throughout New Zealand, the addressed during the past twenty audiences have always been mixed. It is looked on as quite a matter of course now. The percentage of marriage is high in New Zealand, and the government does all it can to encourage this phase of the life of the people."

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

CHAPTER IV.

The palace was ablaze with light in the famous ball-room thousands of electric bulbs twinkled and sparkled, star-shaped and dazzling. Its lofty, dome-like vault, resting on marble columns, was encircled by a balcony, narrow and sculptured, from which the music of the band rose and fell, soft, entrancing, invisible, as from the clouds. The walls were of reddish marbel rounded at the corners. The floor, shining, polished as a mirror, reflected the swaying forms of the dancers as they whirled to and fro.

Beyond, on the grand stair-case, the guests ascended slowly in groups of twos and threes, flecking the marble with splashes of colour, radiant, vivid, like clusters of rose leaves strown on the steps. The perfume was intoxicating, languorous. Light trills as of laughter and snatches of talk, gay and fleeting, mingled with the rhythm of the violins.

The ball was at its height.

In an arch of the stair-case stood a young officer. He was leaning nonchalantly against the carved balustrade, the scarlet and gold of his uniform shone against a green background of palms, distinguishing his broad shoulders from among the rest. The palms screened him as in a niche.

The officer was swarthy of complexion with a short, black moustache, and his eyes, small and near together, roamed carelessly over the throng. As the groups approached the head of the stair-case, one after the other, he saluted smiling, half heeding, and his eyes roved on still more carelessly; sometimes they cross ed.

Whenever they crossed, his eyes would remain fixed, intent, for a moment, on some one advancing to the foot of the stair-case, eagerly watching as the form came nearer and nearer. Then the muscles relaxed. He frowned impatiently, tapping his sword against the carving.

"Hush! Prince Michel!"

The whisper came from behind the leaves of the palms and they swayed slightly, trembling as from a movement or a breath.

The officer started, turning his black eyes swiftly, fiercely on the green, and then looked away again.

"He Boris!" he muttered, hardly moving his lips. "How you come creeping behind one? What is it, a message?"

"Hist st! Speak low."

The voice was like the faint murmur of crickets on a hot summer's day. "The Duke has gone."

"Gone! What! The devil he has!"

"Sh-h—not five minutes ago! A message came from the Tsar himself. He has just slipped away."

The officer gazed straight ahead of him smiling, and bowed to a couple ascending the stair-case. His lips parted as if in greeting. "Did he send you to tell me?"

"No, the Duchess. She has made some excuse and is receiving alone. No one suspects, not yet; but the guests must be diverted, or else—"

"Be still, Boris, be still, you shake the leaves like a bull. When will he return?"

"By midnight, Prince. Could you start the mazurka at once?"

"Presently, Boris. Go and tell my mother I will—presently. The Countess is late, unaccountably late! Is the snow heavy to-night on the quay; are the sledges blocked? Hiss-st!—There she comes!"

The trembling of the leaves ceased suddenly and the young officer leaned forward, his sword clanking, his eyes crossed and fixed on a vague white spot in the distant foyer.

"She is coming! How slowly she moves! What a throng!—There, she comes, white and sweet like a lily, a flower!" The Prince waved his hand, his sword clanked again. "No, she doesn't see me; her eyes are on the ground—and her hair, it gleams like a crown."

The two figures climbing the grand marble stair-case moved forward slowly, step by step, mingling with the flash and colour of the crowd, lost for a moment at the band, then reappearing again. The man, evidently a magnat, was magnificent in his uniform; his breast regal with orders and medals, his grey head held high and his form stiff and straight. On his arm was the Countess, his daughter.

She clung to him, her lips were smiling and her white robes trailed the marble behind her. She was like a young queen, charming and gracious, bowing to right and to left. As the groups drew aside to let her pass, they whispered together, looking up at the carved balustrade; then the crowd closed again.

At the top of the stair-case the Prince sprang forward. He greeted the General hastily, saluting. Then the watchers behind saw how the Countess paused, hesitated, and then, at a few whispered words from the Prince, placed her hand on his arm and the two young figures, the white and the scarlet, disappeared within the doorway.

The violins rose and fell in a dreamy measure. From the sculptured gallery the sound came mysterious, enchanting, swaying the feet with the force of its rhythm.

"Not to-night," said the Countess. "No!" She drew herself away from the arm of the Prince and her lashes drooped over her eyes. "I am tired—later perhaps, Prince."

Her voice low and remonstrating, was lost in the swing of the waltz. With a sudden, swift movement the scarlet and white seemed welded together, whirling into the vortex of light, and of motion.

No word was exchanged. They whirled, gliding, twisting in and out among the dancers; and suddenly, swiftly, as at a signal, the music broke into the measure of the mazurka. A cry went up from the throng. In a twinkling the floor was cleared, the crowd pressed back against the columns; under the reddish marble of the dome four couples gathered, poised hand in hand.

The uniforms of the officers glowed in the light, rich and scarlet, faced with silver and gold. The gowns of their partners were brocade and velvet, purple and crimson, lilac and pearl. Then from the balcony, high up, unseen, the rhythm changed again like a flash, and with it the national dance began.

At first the movements were slow, the steps graceful; the feet seemed scarcely to move, barely gliding over the floor. One by one the couples retreated, the last left alone; and then interchanging. The music grew faster. In that moment, when they were left alone, the Prince bent his head to the slim, swaying whiteness by his side;

"Why did you come so late?" he whispered, "Where were you?"

The Countess' hand was cold like ice. She drew it away and danced on; then she whispered back:

"The Duke! Where is he to-night? He is not here! Why is the mazurka so early, tell me."

They interchanged again.

"Hush," said the Prince, "You noticed?—Don't speak. He has gone to the Tsar. What is it? Are you ill?"

"He has—gone?"

"Dance, Countess, dance. Don't stop; are you mad? Come nearer. Hush!—The Tsar sent for him, but he will be back at midnight. No one must know."

The figure of the mazurka grew stranger and more complicated. When they were thrown together again, the Countess lifted her blue eyes to the eyes of the Prince. They seemed to look at her and yet to look past her, they were crossed. She shivered slightly and turned her head. Her white figure, slender and light as thistledown, floated away from him, and then in a moment she was back, their hands had touched; they were whirling together faster and faster, the tips of her slippers scarcely touching the floor. She closed her eyes.

"You won't tell, not a soul, I can trust you?" whispered the Prince. "Come closer, closer. There is a plot to-night. Boris told me. The Secret Service men are everywhere, watching. Don't be frightened, Countess—your hand is so cold. Can you hear me? Bend you head—so! They hope to make arrests before he returns."

"When—when does he return?"

"Sh—h! At midnight, faster—faster—faster. Let yourself go!"

Nature's Cure For A Cough

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is the Most Largely Imitated Medicine in the Country

What to give the children for croup and colds is the problem mothers now have to solve. Most of them finally decide on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and make it a rule to always have some in the house.

In this medicine are linseed, turpentine and other well-known ingredients of unmistakable value in the cure of colds. It is pleasant to take, so much so that children delight to use it.

So generally is this great medicine used that several imitations have been put on the market. All alike in name only. They are not made from the same formula, nor do they bear the name of Dr. Chase.

You know what you can expect from the use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, but you cannot put much faith in an imitation which sells on the reputation of the article it imitates.

On every bottle of the genuine will be found the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author. This is for your protection and for the protection of your children. Be sure to get the genuine, even if it costs a few cents more. 25 cents a bottle, family size, 60 cents; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

TO SHOW that you are eager to have a guest depart is unpardonable rudeness.

Everybody know that.

To insistently urge a guest to prolong his stay when it is evident that staying would be inconvenient and against his will is almost as great a discourtesy.

And by no means everybody seems to know that.

There are homes where I actually dread to go—and I know everyone has much the same experience—because my going away is made so difficult.

I ought to be pleased to know that I am so much wanted, you say?

I am—very much so — having quite the common share of vanity.

But I am also inside very uncomfortable by the insistence which I have to fight before I am allowed to depart.

I am often made to feel almost rude in going when they urge me so emphatically to stay.

Now to put another in a position where he feels that he is appearing rude—surely that is as ill-bred as to be rude yourself.

From one point of view, more so.

At least it seems so to me.

"I often find myself going back to Darwin's saying about the duration of a man's friendship being one of the best measures of his worth."—Anna Thackeray Ritchie.

A few weeks ago I wrote upon the subject suggested by that quotation, pointing out that it would be an interesting experiment for all of us to apply that test to ourselves, and expressing my fear that many would be found sadly wanting if tried by that standard.

In answer I received this interesting little note, which I thought quite interesting enough to pass on:

"Perhaps it may interest the Woman Philosopher to be told that one of her readers is in frequent correspondence with a friend of seventy-five years' standing, with two other of seventy-three years' standing, with two others of sixty years' standing, and two more of fifty years' standing. Perhaps seven such permanent friendships may be rather an unusual bit of fortune for one man to be grateful for. He ventures therefore to mention it to Miss Cameron."

"In making purchases in some of the larger stores of this city, as well as the smaller ones, I find it quite the custom for saleswomen to address the patrons in this fashion: 'Now, dearie, don't you think that lovely?' or 'Dearie, take this one,' or 'Girlie, this and that.'

"Such familiar terms as these to a total stranger are certainly disgusting and wholly out of keeping under the circumstances. Invariably I seek another saleslady or walk out of the shop. I have heard other women complain in the same way. Would you kindly say something about this in your columns?"

To quote our unforgettable friend, "Dee-lighted."

Only I think the lady's clever little characterization of this irritating habit of cheap familiarity has left little for me to say except "Them's my sentiments, too."

Strength for Bad Backs

You May Cure Lame Back by Giving Your Kidneys Attention ---Booth's Kidney Pills Will Help You

Most men, women and children have bad backs when the kidneys are sick. Older folks suffer with bad kidneys, for the kidneys are the hardest-worked organs of the body and an active life often wears them out before there are any other signs of advancing age.

You should learn the early warnings of sick kidneys, and then it will be easy to take any trouble in the beginning and with the aid of Booth's Kidney Pills make a quick and lasting cure.

Some of the early signs of sick kidneys are backache, lame back, rheumatic pains, neuralgia, sharp pains when stooping or lifting, nervousness, irritability, failing eyesight, sallow, drawn features, dark circles around the eyes, dizzy spells, tired-out state, despondency.

And there are usually disturbances of the urine—too frequent passages, scanty passages, with scalding or burning pain, dark-coloured, heavy urine, having to get up at night. This condition is speedily relieved by Booth's Kidney Pills. A trial is sufficient to prove the claim that they are without equal as a remedy for weak and sick kidneys and are fully guaranteed by the proprietors.

BACK WEAK AND TENDER.

George Gould, of 227 Dalhousie Street, Toronto, Ont., says: — "My back was weak and tender and if I would sit for any length of time a heavy, dull pain would catch me across the small of it and in the region of the kidneys, leaving me unable to draw a breath for many seconds. The urine plainly told of the disordered state of the kidneys, as it was highly coloured and scalding. The kidney secretions were frequent and irregular. Nothing benefitted me until I procured Booth's Kidney Pills and commenced treatment. In less than a week I began to improve. The kidney secretions gradually became normal. The urine cleared to its natural colour and the pains entirely left me. Thanks to Booth's Kidney Pills I am now quite well."

TEST AT OUR EXPENSE.

The proprietors are willing to let any sufferer test Booth's Kidney Pills free of cost. Write the R. T. Booth Co., Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont., stating your case and they will mail you a box free. Booth's Kidney Pills are sold by all druggists, 50c. a box, or sent post-paid from the above address on receipt of price.

THE CELEBRATION OF ST. GEORGE'S DAY PREPARATIONS MADE

Recently a feeling has been growing among the English people of Peterborough that the celebration of St. George's Day by visiting the grand old church of St. Johns, would be appreciated by every one who still sympathises with the Old Country.

A committee has been formed to arrange for a parade, and it is proposed to meet at the hall of the 'Sons of England Benefit Society,' Hunter St. (next Post Office) on Sunday evening at 6.30, when it is hoped that all who possibly can will come forward and attend the service. A special sermon will be preached by the Rev. Chas. Carpender, and a choral service will be rendered by the magnificent choir of St. John's church.

On Monday evening a banquet will be held in Colemans' parlours, George street, and will be presided over by S. A. Peck, Esq. A musical programme has been arranged and a very enjoyable evening is promised to all who can attend. A substantial English dinner will be provided, for which a charge of 50c. will be made. Tickets may be obtained from any member of the committee whose names are undermentioned. During the evening the subject of forming a branch of the St. George's Society will be discussed. This society is making great headway in Canada amongst the English people, who have made their homes here and its advantage will be clearly put to the meeting by a gentleman who has had several years' experience as secretary to a branch in one of our neighbouring cities.

Great hopes are anticipated by the promoters for its success and they trust that every encouragement will be given to them so that a branch can be formed in Peterborough and that the traditions associated with St. George's Day can be kept up, even in a greater measure than in the Old Country.

The committee consists of Messrs. W. Guy, S. Jay, J. Packman, F. Clarke, C. Green, A. Bengtrom, J. Common, T. Pitchford, secretary.

WEDDING BELLS

SOANES-PASSMORE

The marriage of Miss Mary Louise Passmore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Passmore, to Mr. Randolph Spencer Soanes, took place at the residence of the bride's father, to Yonge street, at eight o'clock last night, the Rev. Dr. Treleaven, pastor of Carlton Street Methodist church, officiating.

The bride, who was given away by her father, was attired in white satin with real lace, and coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies. Mrs. Dolly Passmore was matron of honour, in white silk and lace, and carrying pink roses. Mr. Harry Soanes, of Peterborough, was best man.

Mrs. Passmore, wearing black silk and lace, held a reception after the ceremony, when about 60 guests were present. Later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Soanes left for New York, the bride travelling in blue cheviot, with King's blue hat. On their return they will reside at 17 Linden avenue. The groom's gift to the bride was a piano, and to the matron of honour a bracelet.—Toronto Star.

MARSHALL—OSTROM.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. T. Ostrom, in Macdonnell avenue, Parkdale, was the scene of a pretty wedding this afternoon, when the marriage was solemnized of their only daughter, Lola Casey, to Mr. Norman Macpherson Marshall, second son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Marshall.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Canon Bryan, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, in the bow window of the drawing-room, which was decorated with pillars of Easter lilies and marguerites, and banked with palms, with carpet of roses and lilies-of-the-valley.

The bride looked sweet and graceful in a wedding gown of silk crepe, with medallions and quantities of insertion of real lace. Her veil, which was of tulle, was caught with a bandeau of pearls, and she carried a shower of roses and lilies-of-the-valley, which, with a diamond and pearl pendant, were the gifts of the groom. Miss Florence Marshall, sister of the groom, attended as bridesmaid, wearing an empire gown of palest pink voile, embroidered with pink and silver, with satin panels and pink and silver bandeau on her hair. She carried pink roses, and wore the groom's gift, pearl and amethyst earrings. Mr. Lorne Marshall was best man.

An orchestra played the wedding march, and on conclusion Miss Margaret Casey sang "O Promise Me."

Mrs. Ostrom held a reception after the ceremony, wearing kingfs blue charmeuse, with lace yoke and French hat, with pink rose-buds and willow plumes, and corsage bouquet of roses and lilies. Mrs. Marshall was in black lace over satin, and black hat with American Beauties.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall left on the 5.20 for New York, whence they will sail to New Orleans and Mexico, the bride traveling in brown broadcloth smartly tailored and rought straw Napoleon hat with scarlet velvet.—Toronto Star.

BUTTER MAKING PLANT INSTALLED

Through the commendable municipal enterprise of the people of Enniskmore, coupled with the energetic business ability of Mr. G .A. Gillespie, a fine new butter making plant has been installed in the Myrtle cheese factory, which is under the able management of Mr. John Flood.

The new machinery consists of a new 8 h.p. engine with a 400 gallon 'Success' combined churn and butter worker, a 200 gallon cream vat and a new Simplex cream separator, with a skimming capacity of 3,500 lbs. per hour, all of which is fully equipped. It is the intention of the proprietor, Mr. Flood, to skim the whey and make butter from it. This is an idea which has been adopted by a number of cheese factories throughout Ontario, and has met with marked success.

COPIES ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS OF '67-70

The Examiner has to thank Mr. R. H. Shepherd for copies of the illustrated London News, ranging from, in date, from 1867 to 1870. The first date is synonymous with the Confederation of Canada and the Paris International Exposition, and the reign o fthe hoop skirt is shown in the plates of Paris fashions and a hideous haystack style of a hat that would easily reconcile us to the harem skirt if it came to a choice of one or the other. The same beauty of illustration as marks the News to-day, characterised it 44 years ago; if, indeed, the excellent line engravings were not more artistic than the modern style of illustration.

SUFFERED SINCE HER CHILDHOOD

But Dodd's Kidney Pills Made Mrs. Laprairie a New Woman

Nipissing Lady gives an experience that should prove of immense value to the suffering women of Canada.

Laprairieville, Nipissing District, Ont., April 19.—(Special.)—After suffering from various forms of kidney ills since she was a child, Mrs. O. Laprairie is a well woman and once more it has been proved that no case of Kidney Trouble is too severe or of too long standing for Dodd's Kidney Pills to cure.

Interviewed regarding her cure, Mrs. Laprairie said:

"Since I was twelve years of age I have suffered from Kidney Disease. I was always tired. My back would ache and I always had a sharp pain in the top part of my head. My heart also troubled me.

"Hearing of Dodd's Kidney Pills, I gave them a trial, and now I feel like a new woman."

Thousands of Canadian men and women are feeling just as Mrs. Laprairie does—as if life had started all over for them—just because they have cured their kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills. For the kidneys are the mainspring of life. If they are clogged or out of order the whole body is wrong. Dodd's Kidney Pills always put the kidneys in good working order.

"HONEYMOON TRAIL"

'Honeymoon Trail' the merriest and most melodious of all the Hough, Adams and Howard musical comedy successes, will be the attraction at "The Grand" next Tuesday, April 25.

"Honeymoon Trail" has a Chicago record of 225 consecutive performances at the LaSalle Theatre and during all that time never played to a vacant seat at a single performance. It has had one highly successful road season establishing new box office records in many of thecities which it visited last year.

This season's cast of principals, numbers almost all the original favorites, and contains the names of such musical comedy notables as Fred Wyckoff, Arline Bolling, Frances Morrison, Carl George, Rose Gildea, Bonnie Armstrong and Dorothy Fortier. The famous LaSalle Theatre chorus, famous for its dancing ability and its pulchritude, and comprising thirty of the most graceful and handsome members of the "merry merry" ever carried with a road attraction, is a feature, as are the famous original "dancing broilers," ten in number, who make up New Weyburn's Dancing Brownies. "Honeymoon Trail" is a massive production scenically, two special baggage cars being required for the transportation of the scenic and electrical effects, and a traveling crew of eight skilled stage mechanics, electricians and property men are carried by the company.

Seat sale opens Saturday, April 22.

Grand Jury Makes The Usual Presentment Visited Public Buildings

The Grand Jury made its usual presentment to Mr. Justice Teetzel before the Spring Assizes came to an end this morning. It was as follows:

To His Lordship, Mr. Justice Teetzel—

May it please your Lordship,—We, the Grand Jury for the County of Peterborough for the High Court, beg to present briefly as follows:

We, with your Lordship, are desirous of giving expression to our recognition of the material prosperity of our County, and also are pleased to claim that this county is but one more evidence of the general advancement of our Dominion.

Occupying the position of one of the learned and able Justices of our Province, you may well feel proud of the impartiality and integrity of our Courts of Justice, largely due to the integrity of our Judges.

As directed, we visited the following institutions, namely, the County Gaol, which appeared to us to be in a condition consistent with the regulations, and we cannot speak too highly of the officials in charge.

The Protestant Home was also visited and, although being an old building, everything was most desirable and clean, and the inmates comfortable and contented. We understand, or were led to believe, that a more modern building is now contemplated.

The Nicholls Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital we also visited, and we cannot help but feel proud of what we saw in both institutions.

The House of Providence and Children's Orphanage were also visited and they appealed to us as being managed in a manner that should bring credit to the management.

The Children's Shelter being placarded, we were deprived of visiting it.

We would strongly urge upon the committee in charge to provide more lavatories for Judge's Chambers and upstairs Court Room.

Hoping that you may be long spared to occupy the exalted position you now so ably fill.

We also visited the County House of Refuge near Lakefield and, with former juries, were favourably impressed with the condition of affairs there, the old people feeling at home and happy and contented and we do not think it too much to say that the County Council are to be congratulated upon the provision made and we trust that the city will make like provision in the near future.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

THOMAS WEBSTER,
Foreman.

His Lordship, Justice Teetzel took advantage of the opportunity to compliment Mr. O'Connell on the clever manner in which he had conducted the defence of Deline, and the great amount of work and trouble he went to in preparing his defence.

Addressing the Court Officials also, he said that he was pleased to recognize that the courts of the County were respected. He was pleased to note the prosperity of the community and to see the great progress the city was making regarding the erection of factories and other fine buildings, also the prosperity of the country in general. He also spoke of the improvements that were being made at the Court House.

Then, turning to the Jury, he thanked them for the splendid manner, in which they discharged their duties.

STORE PHOTO

MANY PERSONS do not realize to what extent they benefit by being able to select and purchase their Wall Papers, Rugs, Draperies and Curtains all at one store and all on one floor. We have heard this discussed many a time by women who were particular in their selections of home fittings and furnishings and invariably the decision was in favour of the above store. It saves a woman worry and overcomes a great amount of indecision on her part. Everything points to the departmental store in these respects—

Goods purchased together match in colour & pattern;
Easy selection without much worry;
No taking samples to other stores to compare;
Expert salesmen who can advise wisely to the benefit of the customer;
And others too numerous to mention.

Our salesmen work out colour and pattern schemes together and create new ideas which they are pleased to impart to our patrons. The above cut is a reproduction of a photo, of a corner on our third floor, showing a display of Wall Paper, Net Curtains and Drapes, also the new "Windowphanie" or stained glass substitute.

Select your Homefurnishings and fittings at a store where you can get the best selection, without the worry of going from store to store to compare patterns and match colours, and where you are away from the noise and bustle of the main floors—our Third Floor Dept.

THE CANADIAN CANOE COMPANY WILL ERECT NEW STRUCTURE

Board of Works Met Last Night—Auburn Power Co. Will Erect Retaining Wall on Water St.—Bell Telephone Co. Will Erect Poles—Other Important Business Transacted

A meeting of the City Board of Works was held last night in the Committee room, with Ald. Metheral in the chair, and the following members present: Ald. Anderson, Brown, Buller, Graham and Duncan. A large number of communications, varying in importance, were dealt with.

The first matter to be taken up was that regarding the erecting of a building on Rink street, by the Canadian Canoe Company. Mr. Brownscombe appeared on behalf of the company, and explained what they wanted of the Board, very clearly. He said that the Company contemplated erecting a three-storey brick building on Rink street, between George and Aylmer streets. They wanted to put the building as close as possible to the street. The Company wanted the Council to give them the correct grading of the street. Mr. Brownscombe explained that they wanted the lot there on account of it being close to the railway stations and McDonald's mill, where they get their raw material.

He also said that they would excavate about 4 feet of a cellar, and the earth could be used to fill up the deep drain in front of the building. He stated that they were figuring on erecting a structure about 32 x 114 and three storeys high. One behind this, for a storehouse, 48 x 80 and a lumber shed behind that 20 x 114. He said that there was a depression of more than four feet in the street, and he wanted to make sure that the council would not raise the street in front of their building after it was erected.

It was moved by Ald. Buller and seconded by Ald. Graham, that the Company be granted the grade, and that the work begin at once.

The Auburn Power Company had a representative present (Mr. Munro), requesting that they be given permission to erect a concrete retaining wall with a railing on top, along the east side of Water street at the Colonial Weaving Company's works, to be in connection with the new dam, the wall to be in proportion with the street. A letter was read from the Water Commissioners, asking that with regard to the Company's request, that the Board should ask the Company to allow the city to run a water main over the dam.

Ald. Buller moved that the matter be left in the hands of the City Engineer and Ald. Metheral, that they meet the Water Commissioners with Mr. Munro, and discuss the matter. This was carried.

A communication was received from the Peterborough Hardware Co., regarding the pipes the city got through them. A number of the pipes —to the value of $23.21 were broken, and the Board had the Company deduct that amount from the bill. At the time the deduction was made, but when the Company had communicated with the factory, the latter would not share the damages so the Peterborough Hardware Co. sent in the bill to the Board of Works. It was moved and seconded that no action be taken.

The citizens of Hart avenue want that thoroughfare gravelled and put in good condition, but as the water main has not yet been put in, it had to be left over.

Another communication stated that Chambers street could be improved in appearance a lot at a low expense. It was moved and seconded that the City Engineer look into the matter, and report to the Board.

City Clerk Armstrong explained to the Board that a new law had been established, and that under it, the City Engineer must give notice to the citizens before any action can be taken, and that the notice contain an estimate of the cost. Or the City Engineer can go on with work, and put a notice in the papers stating the amount it will cost. It was moved and seconded that the City Engineer and Ald. Duncan look into the matter and report to the Board, in regard to Chambers street.—Carried.

The Bell Telephone Company asked that they be allowed to erect ten poles on the east side of Water street, and ten poles on the north end of George street to the Isolation Hospital; also eleven poles on the west side of George street to King Edward street. It was moved and seconded that the request be granted

A request was received from the people on Romaine street, asking that the drain constructed on Romaine street, east of Park street, should be continued west of Park. Ald. Buller moved that the matter be looked into.—Carried.

It was requested that the ditch on Sherbrooke street, between Park St. and 300 feet west, be piped and filled in. The cost would be about $362. The matter was left over.

Gilchrist street residents requested that a sidewalk be put on the street between London and Dublin streets. The City Engineer will look into the matter and report to the Board.

Residents on Charlotte street want a sidewalk put in from Maitland ave. to the boundary. The matter was laid over.

A communication was received regarding the putting in of a pipe sewer on Argyle street, from 239 feet west of George street, to Sunnyside street. The matter was passed before in the Council. The sidewalk on Concession street, between Douro and Hazard streets, was also on the previous list.

An application was received from Arthur Donope for putting on street signs. He offered to give board signs with painted black letters for 35 cts. It was requested that the City Clerk find out what the enamalled signs cost.

The Horticultural Society asked for $200.00 to build a walk in Victoria Park. The matter was left in the hands of the City Engineer and Ald. Metheral.

An application was received from J. W. Thorybeck for the city sewer construction work. Another was received from Martin Leary for the position as foreman on the construction work. The matter was left over until the time for the work to begin is nearer.

Mr. E. H. D. Hall sent in a communication regarding the Edward Green and Campbell estate property. The reserve is valued at $500.00. Mr. Hall made an inspection of Water and Charlotte street, and there is a brick building built partly on the reserve. The matter was left over.

A new walk is now in progress into the Isolation Hospital.

The matter of the trees growing above the sidewalk on Gilmour street came up, and the Board decided to go around the city, starting at 9 a.m., on Tuesday morning, to see the places that need repairs.

OUTLINE OF PLANS OF HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY

Aim is to Make Peterborough Beautiful—Five Hundred Members Wanted for the Society—Will Receive Premiums Worth Far More Than the Small Membership Fee Charged.

A meeting of the Directors of the Horticultural Society was held in the City Engineer's office last night, to consider the report of the special committee appointed to bring in suggestions regarding ways and means for the increase in the membership of the Society and the general improvement of Peterborough.

The following report was submitted and adopted:

Gentlemen.—Your committee met and considered the matter laid before them, and beg to report as follows:

(1) That a report submitted by Mr. Hay be adopted and acted on in part as the Board deem advisable.

(2) That a Ladies' Auxiliary be added to the directorship and one lady in each ward be selected to procure membership to the Society.

(3) That places of business be selected for the paying of subscriptions. These will include the office of the Canadian Horticulturist and the three daily papers of the city.

(4) That the name of the Society be changed from the Peterborough and Ashburnham Society to the Peterborough Horticultural Society.

(5) That the options given to the new members be either one dozen plants for bedding out; 1 doz. plants, suitable for window boxes, or one large Boston fern. In addition to the bulbs each member will receive The Canadian Horticulturist, and also his share of the very liberal distribution of fall bulbs furnished by the Society.

The report submitted by Mr. Hay, the City Engineer, is as follows:

It is desirable that some concerted action be taken by the citizens of Peterborough to enhance the beauty of the city that nature has done so much for, by a carefully worked-out plan for:

(a) The improvement and beautifying of the several small parks already owned by the city.

(b) Acquiring vacant lands in the several wards before it becomes prohibitive by the rapid growth the city is now undergoing.

(c) The laying out of a plan for boulevard drives, connecting the several parks.

(d) The improvement of waste places at several points where streets go into one another, such as now exists on Park street, at the junction of Rubidge, Reid, Downie, Donegal and Gilchrist streets, as well as the points and bays on the river at Crescent street, Wolfe street wharf, London, Dublin and Waterford street, between Dublin and Antrim, the bend at Antrim and Harvey, Smith, Hunter East and Douro streets.

(e) The encouragement to citizens to improve their premises generally by removal of unsightly fences and out-buildings, uniform planting and trimming of shade trees.

(f) The laying of concrete curbs, and care of boulevards by the city on local improvement system.

(g) Strict regulations against vandalism in parks and that police protection be provided for. Some measures taken to prevent power lines, telephone and others from damaging shade trees.

(h) Conferring with the City Council with the request that a percentage of the taxes be applied each season for carrying out of plans.

The members present were: Peter Campbell, Pres.; James English, Jas. Edgar, Samuel Jordan, G. F. Marsh, S. F. Hardy, Frank Wise, Sec.-Treas.

The names of the business houses willing to act as collectors and to receive membership fees, will be published in an early issue of the city papers. Posters are being printed to be placed in the windows, advertising the fact that membership for the Horticultural Society may be taken here and receipts given for the same. Much interest is being manifested in the campaign for 500 new members, and well it might be for the premiums given are worth far more than the small membership fee charged. The Society has already done much to beautify Peterborough and there should be no trouble in securing new members.

FRANK WISE, Secretary.

HUNTER STREET BRIDGE WILL BE REFLOORED

At a meeting of the Board of Works held last night, the matter of putting a new top on the Hunter street bridge came up. Ald. Metheral stated that the top was so worn that it would not hold the nails when repairs were being made. It was decided that a new top be put on the bridge, but the matter was left in the hands of the City Engineer and Ald. Metheral.

Ald. Graham spoke of the dilapidated state of the sidewalk along by the McDonald Company's lumber yard on George street, and stated that a new board walk should be put in at once, and that the old walk should be used to put in a wing at the south end of George street, where there is no walk at all. It was decided to get busy with this also.

THE RUSSELL MOTOR CAR COMPANY AFLOAT

The Russel Motor Car Company, Limited, of Toronto, with a capitalization of $1,000,000, has been successfully floated. It must have been regarded as an excellent industrial proposal, as shown by the manner in which the stock offerings were snapped up. This morning the Examiner received a wire from A. E. Ames & Co., the underwriters, directing the cancellation of the advertisement in the Examiner inviting subscriptions, as the whole volume of stock was underwritten at 4 o'clock yesterday, and the books closed. More and more the services of the newspapers are enlisted in the promotion of industrial and other flotations, and it is worth remarking that, as a tribute to the value of advertising, such flotations are generally successfully effected.

IN FAVOUR OF THE PACT

SMALLPOX SITUATION

Ottawa, April 20.—During the Easter recess the Government received twenty-seven communications from public bodies presenting views on reciprocity. These were tabled by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the request of Mr. Foster when the House met yesterday afternoon. Every one of the twenty-seven endorsed the Government's proposals. Of the total, 63 came from the prairie provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, eight from the Province of Quebec and six from Ontario. They indicate that the artisan is joining the farmer. Resolutions are now flooding the Government from the labor interests in the older provinces, equally emphatic in their support of the pact as those of the western farmers.

There was a very small attendance of members when the House assembled yesterday after the Easter recess. Conspicuous amongst the absentees were the western Conservatives. The Opposition leader was not in his place, and several of the Ministers had gone to the funeral of the son of Hon. George P. Graham at Brockville.

Col. Hughes called attention to the "extraordinary and dangerous" condition at the Parliament Buildings, and also in the City of Ottawa, as a result of the smallpox epidemic. He pointed out that one of the official stenographers had contracted the disease and had been removed to Porter's Island last Sunday, and the colonel asked if it was true that there had been smallpox for some weeks in the house in which the young man boarded. He desired to know what action the Government proposed to take, in view of the fact that the city officials were "teetotally inadequate."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said a memorial had been placed in his hands, which states that Charles Blue had been sent to Porter's Island last Sunday, and on the preceding day he had been in the Parliament Buildings. However, the other stenographers who occupied the same room had left for the Easter recess on the Wednesday previous. The room had been fumigated.

Hon. George E. Foster asked if the report in the newspapers was true that the Government had given permission to another American gunboat to proceed through the canals to the great lakes. He brought the matter up, he said, because he saw it stated in the press that the permission would be given out, and that it would not be necessary for the United States to withdraw one of the vessels now on the great lakes.

The Premier said it was true that permission had been granted to replace the Nashville with the Dubuque, but neither vessel had yet passed through the canals.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed F. D. Monk that he would not promise to take up the question this session of legislation for the conservation of the water powers of the Dominion.

The debate on the reciprocity resolutions was continued by Mr. MacNutt, Liberal member for Saltcoats, Sask., who spoke at some length in favor of the proposed pact.

E. A. Lancaster (Lincoln) spoke strongly against the agreement, particularly from the point of view of the fruit growers.

David Henderso nof Halton moved the adjournment of the debate.

HE PLEADED GUILTY

M. T. Buchanan, Ex-Mayor of Ingersoll, Acknowledges Three Counts in Assizes—Surprises the Court

SUSPENDED SENTENCE

St. Thomas, April 20.—Mitchell T. Buchanan, ex-mayor of Ingersoll and former warden of Oxford County, spent something less than an hour in the prisoners' dock at the Elgin assizes before Mr. Justice Middleton yesterday afternoon. During that brief period he pleaded guilty on three charges of "grafting" while occupying a municipal office, and at the end of the time was released on suspended sentence. Later the jury returned "no bill" on the conspiracy indictment against B. B. McCarty of Thamesford.

At 4.15 o'clock the grand jury, which had been considering since two o'clock Tuesday afternoon the ten indictments against Buchanan, returned five true bills as follows:

1. Conspiracy to defraud.
2. Breach of trust.
4. Conspiracy and breach of trust.
5. Conspiracy to defraud.

Buchanan here entered the box for arraignment and Crown Attorney McCannon read indictment No. 6, concerning a deal with the Sawyer-Massey Co. of Hamilton.

"How do you plead?" the clerk asked the prisoner.

"Guilty," was the unexpected reply.

"Guilty?" queried the clerk, not sure that he had understood.

But Buchanan repeated "Guilty."

Indictments No. 4 and No. 1 were then read in full, and the plea in each case was "Guilty."

The crown did not prosecute the remaining charges.

G. T. Blackstock, K.C., crown prosecutor, moved the sentence of the court, and J. M. McEvoy, London, of counsel for prisoner, rose.

"Let me say on behalf of the prisoner, my lord, that restitution has been made to the fullest extent," he said.

His Lordship—"You mean to say that the amounts named in these indictments have been refunded to the County of Oxford?"

Mr. McEvoy—"Three thousand dollars; my client has been put to very great expense during the past three years, and I ask your lordship's best consideration under the circumstances."

J. G. Wallace and W. T. McMullen, also acting for Buchanan, left the speaking to Mr. McEvoy. While the lawyer's plea for his client was one of the shortest on record, Mr. Blackstock's explanation of the situation was very lengthy. At its close the judge commented at some length also, and finally released Buchanan on suspended sentence, the prisoner giving his recognizance verbally in the sum of $10,000. A significant part of his lordship's address was a reference to those persons who were connected with Buchanan in the deals mentioned in the indictments, and the expression of a hope that justice would be done in the cases.

MANSLAUGHTER CHARGED.

Chauffeur McLetchie Charged With Killing Jacobs.

Toronto, April 20.—Herbert McLetchie, 59 Robinson street, chauffeur for A. J. Strathy, will face a charge of killing Edward Jacobs with his employer's automobile in Bloor street, between Manning avenue and Clinton street. Jacobs, who was an old man, died in hospital after being struck at that place on the night of March 3, and the police, with no clue save a tiny broken oil cup which was found on the scene of the accident after Jacobs was struck, have been searching for the man and the auto which went right on after the accident.

Yesterday Detective Mitchell arrested McLetchie upon a warrant for manslaughter. He took him as he was leaving the Police Court, where he had been remanded on a charge of wounding Miss Elsie Powell, whom, with two others, he upset from the machine in Dundas street when the machine overturned in a collision with a street car.

The arrest was made upon information supplied by an auto repair man who said that he had repaired the car and who, with another expert, declared that the cup found on the scene of the accident fitted exactly to the piece which he had taken from a socket on the Strathy machine, a Cadillac touring car.

McLetchie was questioned by Inspector of Detectives Duncan. To him he said that he had broken the cup off the machine together with three others' cups when he was driving Mr. Strathy in Barrie some months ago. He said that he threw away the broken pieces, he thought, in the Barrie garage. He denied that it was his machine which had been in the accident which killed Jacobs, but could not tell where he or the machine, which has been in his sole custody since Mr. Strathy has been out of the city, was on the night of the accident.

The woman who gave evidence of seeing the car at the inquest into Jacobs' death was shown the car she said that it was like the one which she had seen at the scene of the accident. She could not identify the man as either of those in the car of whom she had only a fleeting glimpse.

Power Should Be Limited.

London, April 20.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Pall Mall Gazette, as to the alleged pretensions of the Roman Catholic Church in Quebec, says "the climax has come in the annulment by a Montreal judge of a marriage between two Catholics celebrated by a Protestant minister. This whole story is one more vivid illustration of what the Roman Church, where she has power of any kind behind her, will do, and how very desirable in the interests of the happiness of humanity it is that such power be very strictly limited."

Fine Shooting by Cadets.

Quebec, April 20.—The competition which will result in the choice of the twelve cadets to represent Canada at the matches of the Imperial Cadet Association due to take place in London on Empire Day, resulted in some marvelous shooting on the part of the youthful rifle shots of Quebec. Out of a possible 240 no less than three scores of 192 were made, and eight others made over 180.

NO STATE CHURCH

Portugal Has Nearly Completed Her Disestablishment Bill—Main Outlines Are Finished

BISHOPRIC SUPPRESSED

Lisbon, April 20.—The Cabinet has concluded the finishing touches on the decree of separation regarding the church and state. This will be promulgated on Friday or Saturday. The main points of the decree are as follows: The state concedes entire liberty of all creeds, the Catholic creed ceasing to be the state religion from the date of the promulgation. Hence forth all churches will be maintained by the faithful. The beneficed clergy will continue to receive their stipends until July 1, after which they will be paid pensions.

All the Portuguese and foreign clergy engaged in religious work, will continue as hitherto, but all others must obtain authorization. All the religious property which is proved to belong to private individuals, either Portuguese or foreign, will be respected. British and other foreign seminaries will be allowed to remain, but those connected with the seminaries will not be allowed in the streets in clerical garb.

As the Catholic will no longer be the state religion, priests may marry so far as Portuguese law is concerned. In case of death, pension will revert to the parents, widow or children.

The separation of church and state was announced in a decree issued by the Provincial Government last October. The details of the separation were left for the consideration of the Cabinet. The announcement by Foreign Minister Machado last January that the decree would be promulgated within a month, led to the assurance of a pastoral letter signed by the patriarch of Lisbon to the archbishops and bishops of Portugal. This letter, while it acclaimed the Government for certain measures, criticised it harshly because of the dissolution proposal. The Government ordered the Provincial Government to forbid the reading of the pastoral letter, and later the arrest of several priests followed for disobeying the order.

The official journal to-day published a decree suppressing the bishopric of Bega, and ordering judicial proceeding against the bishop on the charge of embezzlement. The Bishop of Bega was among those expelled from Portugal by the Provisional Government. After his expulsion he remained in hiding for a few days and then departed into Spain.

Society Women Smugglers.

Chatham, April 20—Thirty Chatham women, some of them society members, are shortly to receive notices from the customs office to call and pay duty on articles they are accused of smuggling from Detroit.

During the Easter holidays a great many Chatham women spent a day or so in Detroit, and many of them increased their time by making numerous purchases. Their action was discovered, and now they have to pay the piper.

Body Found Beside Track.

Kingston, April 20.—With his skull fractured in several places, right hand mangled and face badly bruised, the body of a man named P. Cahan is at Corrett's morgue waiting to be claimed. The body was found lying beside the track at six o'clock yesterday morning, about three miles west of Collin's Bay, by the conductor of an eastbound freight train. He is believed to belong to Montreal.

Clergyman at R.M.C.

Kingston, April 20.—Rev. L. T. Miller, B.A., rector of Abbotsford, Que., and I.A. Gibb, also of Abbotsford, are attending the Royal Military College for the purpose of taking a short course. Rev. Mr. Miller is the first clergyman that has ever taken such a course here.

CHURCH LEAGUE DRAWS UP SEASON SCHEDULE

A splendid meeting of the Church Football League was held in the Y. M. C. A. parlours last night at 8.30, when the schedule for the coming season was drawn up and other important matters discussed.

The chairman, Mr. P. D. Fitzgerald, opened the meeting with a short address, after which he called on secretary Mr. F. Howarth, for the minutes for the last meeting. These were unanimously adopted.

The arrangements for an At Home were then made. A musical programme will be rendered, after which refreshments are to be served. Chief of Police Thompson was elected the Honourable President and following is the list of patrons:

Rev. Canon Davidson, Rev. Brown, Rev. W. C. Biddiford, Rev. Trumpour,, Rev. H. C. Keith, Mr. Webb, and Mr. Kitney.

The committee consists of the representatives of the different teams, and are as follows:

Mr. H. C. Lewis, Byersville.
Mr. Flowers, Y.M.C.A.
Mr Theobald, Park street
Mr. Gates, McMarsnville.
Mr. Webb, St. John's.
Mr. E. Kidd, Cold Springs.
Mr. P. Brown, St. James
Mr. J. W. Cook, Knox.

It was then decided on that the winning team of the Church League would enter the Midland Football League semi-finals, providing no friction would be caused by so doing as the Church League intends to boost the game along instead of keeping it back.

All games are to be played on Saturday afternoons, excepting those with Cold Springs, which are to be pulled off on Wednesday evenings.

The following preliminary schedule was drawn up and will hold good until May 24th, unless some other team wishes to enter, when a new one would have to be arranged:

Saturday, April 29—

Park St. vs. St James
St. John's vs. Knox
Wednesday, May 3—

Their Good Work Is Appreciated

Chief Howard, care of Fire Department, Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I beg to convey to you the appreciation of the Peterborough Light and Power Co. for the effective work done by your Department at the fire in the gas plant on Monday night and am enclosing a cheque for $25.00 to the Firemen's Benefit Fund, as a slight testimonial thereof.

Yours truly,

The Peterborough Light and Power Co., W. H. Munro, Manager.

This is the second testimonial the firemen have recently received, expressing appreciation of services rendered, and the men at the Hall wish to say they feel grateful to citizens who express their good will.

Chief Howard says that these bouquets, in a measure, offset some of the bumps received by the Department.

Removed To New Premises

The Canadian Furnishing House, which has been located on Charlotte street, until lately, has just moved into bright, new premises, at 311 George street, where they will be better able to carry on their rapidly-growing trade in Ladies' and Men's Clothing and House Furnishings. The firm have built up a reputation, based on fair treatment of all customers, and many people have been assisted by them in clothing their families and adding to their home furnishings. This policy will continue to be followed by the Company, and in their new and comfortable quarters, a satisfactory business is sure to be the result.

OTTAWA, APRIL 20.—A very fashionable wedding took place here this afternoon, when the marriage was solemnised of Lola Brice Powell, the daughter of W. F. Powell, to Capt. The bride was given away by her brother, W. E. Powell, of Haileybury and there were many guests from various parts of Ontario, Quebec and old country. CLOSING OUT BY PUBLIC AUCTION

The China Hall on George street has started an auction sale, since last Saturday, to close out the entiree stock of European and Japanese china, regardless of cost, to turn into cash. Also, they received a consignment of an immense quantity of Japanese high art goods, to be sacrified during a short period of time in this city. The store is crowded every afternoon and night, and things are going at very low prices. The prices are about one-quarter usually got in Toronto. The store is beautifully displayed with over 200 cases of real hand-painted china of all kinds of useful and ornamental articles, as well as antique and modern pieces, silk mandarin coats, kimonos, etc., are entirely new to our people as they are directly imported from Japan. All goods are thoroughly explained by Mr. Y. Otsuka, the Japanese auctioneer. The sale is started at 2.30 p.m. and 8 o'clock at night. The store is opened for public inspection during mornings. They expect to sell the entire stock quickly. This affords the grandest opportunity to our citizens to have genuine art china at bargain prices.

57th Regiment To Visit Brockville

The 57th Regiment wil have its annual outing this year at Brockville.

This was decided upon at the meeting of the officers on Tuesday night, when the invitation of the Brockville Regiment was accepted. The Peterborough Regiment was greatly in demand, invitations having been received from half a dozen Ontario cities and towns. The Regiment will have two days in Brockville, going down for Dominion Day, which falls this year on Saturday. They will leave Peterborough on Friday night and return early on Monday morning.

The Regiment in efficiency and numbers is in grand condition this season. The first drills have been very largely attended, and the officers are looking forward to this year being the banne: one in the history of the Regiment.

"SLEEPLESSNESS."

Thousands of people all over this land toss night after night on a sleepless pillow. The eyes do not close in the refreshing slumber that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right.

Some are troubled with weak and smothering spells; others palpitation of the heart; others have their nerves unhinged; but whatever the cause—it comes entirely from a derangement of either the heart or nerves, or both Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills offer the blessing of sound, refreshing slumber. They do this by their invigorating effect on the heart and nerves and will tone up the whole system to perfect condition.

Mr H. Jewel, Keswick, Ont., writes: "I am glad to have the pleasure of telling you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. I would have weak spells, seemed to lose my breath, and would have to get up in the night as I could not sleep. I tried many medicines but found nothing good until I used Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took three boxes and it is three years ago since I did so, and I haven't been troubled since."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

May Stop Mints.

Washington, April 20.—Whether the Government will close or abolish some of its mints is an acute problem before treasury officials. Secretary MacVeagh is ready to intruct the assay offices and mints to begin issuing gold certificates against old bullion and foreign gold coin. As soon as this begins, the coining of gold will practically stop.

Nothing but smaller silver coins and pennies, known in treasury parlance as minor and subsidiary coin, will be clicked off hereafter, unless there is unusual demeand for gold coins, and it is estimated that the mints at San Francisco and Philadelphia, running on very small time, will fill all the treasury's needs.

A saving of several hundred thousand dollars a year will be effected by the change.

Traveler Gets Six Months.

North Bay, April 21.—J. P. Mitchell, charged with the theft of twenty-five suits of clothes, and a trunk belonging to the New York Tailors, Limited, Toronto, was sentenced yesterday by Magistrate Weegar to six months in the Central Prison.

Charles Darling, manager of the firm for which Mitchell was traveling up to the end of January, appeared against the prisoner. Mitchell took an order for custom clothing, and was given twenty-five suits of stock clothes to dispose of at not less than ten dollars a suit. He sold the lot for $65, claiming that the firm had not sent expense money, and he was stranded, and that the suits were not worth more than the price secured.

THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT IS KEENLY INTERESTED IN CONFERENCE

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Replies in Commons to Hon. Geo. E. Foster's Declaration That the Cabinet is Idle About Imperial Meeting.

HAVE PLENTY OF WORK

Ottawa, April 21.—Hon. George E. Foster interrupted the reciprocity debate in the House of Commons yesterday by a two-hours' discussion on the approaching conference in London. Mr. Foster was at some pains to review the work of the previous conferences, and concluded by criticizing the Government for not having pursued the subjects taken up and arranging further topics for discussion when the conference resumes next month.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made it clear that the Government was not indifferent with regard to the approaching conference, and that there were many questions which had not yet been disposed of, and therefore it was inadvisable to introduce new subjects. Sir Wilfrid, however, kept his own counsel in reference to the possibility of his not attending the conference, and the conclusion is naturally formed in the lobbies of the House that the Premier's trip will depend on the progress made with reciprocity.

The reciprocity debate was resumed in the evening, when Dr. Edwards (Frontenac) spoke for three hours in opposition to the trade proposals. A. M. Beauparlant (St. Hyacinthe), moved the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Foster occupied the attention of the House for an hour and a half with a review of the work which has been accomplished by the Imperial Conferences and the secretariate of that body, more particularly with reference to the developments of the past eighteen months.

Mr. Foster then proceeded to criticize the Government for not having suggested any topics of discussion at the next conference. The other overseas dominions were full of suggestions, because they were full of the spirit of the Imperial Conference.

Sir Wilfrid, in his reply, dealt with the criticism that Canada had not offered any suggestions as to the Imperial Conference. The decision of the Government, in this regard, he said, was not due to indifference, but rather to the belief that there were enough matters left open by the last conference to engage the attention of the next one.

There was the subject of defence, which had not been exhausted. Then there was the trade question, which would probably be discussed at several conferences yet before all are agreed on it. In 1902 the resolution adopted set forth that free trade within the Empire would be impossible. That was still the case, but it was no reason why the matter should be abandoned. The recommendations of the last conference in regard to immigration had not been acted upon for various reasons, and the matter would doubtless again have to be discussed in all its bearings. Then the question of an "all red" steamship service had not been settled. In this connection the Premier said that the time was probably near at hand when the first service on the Atlantic could be established, but the difficulty was with the Pacific end of the project.

The Premier laid particular stress on the necessity for a discussion of the question of the uniform naturalization laws. At the present time people from other countries naturalized in Canada are British subjects only while they remain in this country. Owing to the large immigration and the changed conditions, the present regulations are inadequate, and a change is desirable. He repeated that all these questions would engage the delegates to the conference for a month, and that it was due to this, and not to indifference, that the Government had made no suggestions.

THE STATES ARE DIVIDED ON RECIPROCITY QUESTION

Factional Fights Are Rife in Discussion of the Pact—Party Lines Are Badly Broken—Session a Stormy One.

VOTE PERHAPS TO-NIGHT

Washington, April 21.—State and party affiliations were repeatedly broken in the House of Representatives yesterday in the concluding hours of the fight on the Canadian reciprocity bill. Democrats denounced their fellow Democrats for supporting a Republican protective principle; and Republicans hurled criticism against their fellow Republicans for marching with the Democrats toward the free trade goal.

During the seven hours of debate twenty-four men spoke on the reciprocity measure. Two-thirds of them pleas for its defeat, in speeches of from one minute to a half hour in length; and in this number were two Democrats from North Carolina and Republicans from any of the northern states.

The freedom of the debate against the bill brought forth from Mr. Dalzell of Penna, leader of the opposition the acknowledgement that Democratic Leader Underwood had been "exceedingly fair and generous" to those opposed to the bill. Most of the criticisms of the bill were from agricultural sections, and based on the belief that reciprocity with Canada would injure the agriculture of the United States.

The difference in the North Carolina delegation, all of whom are Democrats, were vigorously aired on the floor. Representative Webb declared that Claude Kitchen, who opened the reciprocity fight last Friday, had no right to criticize him or other members of the state delegation who proposed to vote against the reciprocity measure. Mr. Kitchen had accused him of standing side by side with the Republican stand-pat leaders, he said; but he said he could with equal justice accuse Mr. Kitchen of having worked with these same Republican leaders in the past.

Temperate words from the presiding officer, Mr. Shorley of Kentucky, brought from Mr. Webb the statement that he had no personal feeling against Mr. Kitchen; but that four members of the state delegation proposed to vote against the agreement because they believed it was opposed to all Democratic ideas.

The Minnesota delegation broke on the rocks of reciprocity. Mr. Nye of Minneapolis, spoke for the bill, and Messrs. Steenerson, Anderson, Davis and Volstead opposed it. The Michigan delegation showed a like division, Mr. Doremus advocating the bill and J. M. C. Smith opposing it. From Pennsylvania, Messrs. Bowman and Farr advocated its passage, and Mr. Focht denounced it.

From California, Mr. Needham spoke for the bill and Mr. Kahn against it. Representatives Hobson of Alabama, Murray of Massachusetts and Curley of Massachusetts advocated its passage, and Representatives Good and Prouty of Iowa, Morgan of Oklahoma, Burke of South Dakota, Helgeson of North Dakota, French of Idaho, Young of Kansas, and Lafollette of Washington, spoke against it.

General debate on the measure will close this afternoon at three o'clock with speeches by Representatives Underwood, McCall and Dalzell. The bill will then be taken up under the rule, giving permission for amendments. An effort will be made to secure a final vote on the bill to-night, but the leaders of the House are not sure that it can be reached.

El Paso, Texas, April 21.—Unless the federals make an attack on the rebel army that has threatened to assault Juarez, Francisco I. Madero, jr., says there will be no assault on Jaurez until after three o'clock this afternoon. If by that time he has not received assurances from Porfiro Diaz that he will retire from the Presidency, Madero declares that the attack on Juarez will take place at once.

"All that the feredals want is time to bring up reintorcements," he said yesterday, when asked if he would consider an armistice. I will give Diaz twenty-four hours to resign," he said, to a delegation of Elpasoans and Mexican citizens that called on him in his camp in the hills near Juarez and asked him to consider peace terms.

The volunteer peace commissioners who visited the provisional president and insurrecto commander, went under permission of the federals, and made the trip in two automobiles with white flags.

Earngey Committed.

Toronto, April 21.—W. D. Earngey, K.C., was committed for trial to the May assizes from the Police Court yesterday morning, upon two charges of forgery, in preparing false mortgages, upon which he induced two clients to loan money.

Ernest Duke swore that he did not sign the mortgage upon which his name appears, and that he did not own the property in question.

J. G. Scott, master of titles at Osgoode Hall, swore that his name, which appeared upon certificates of registry upon the mortgages, had not been signed by him.

Naval Contingent to Coronation.

Ottawa, April 21.—The Government has decided to send a Canadian naval contingent to the coronation. It will consist of thirty-five petty officers and all, save the officer and two petty officers, will be chosen from among recruits to the navy. They will not be sent over on a cruiser.

Dangerous Play.

London, Ont., April 21.—Playing "cowboys and Indians," John Wright, nine years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Wright, 613 Elmwood avenue, was struck in the eye by a bullet from an air-rifle in the hands of a companion named Parkinson. Without knowing that it contained a charge he suddenly pointed it at his comrade and commanded him to fly.

It was found that the ball had entered the lower eyelid of the eye. It is not yet known whether the little fellow will lose the sight of the eye.

Twice Wrecked.

Rockland, Me., April 21.—The two-masted schooner Caroline Gray ran ashore off Cape Cod, is the second vessel in which Captain Samuel H. Rogers of this city has been wrecked recently. Five weeks ago yesterday he was wrecked in the Bay of Fundy with the Deer Isle schooner Allan Greene, and lost one of his crew. The Gray is valued at $6,000 and is not insured. She was bound from Frankfort, Me., for New York, with paving stones.

PRIEST REBUKED.

He Smiled at Idea of Prayers in a Masonic Lodge.

Montreal, April 21.—M. L. A. Caron, chartered accountant, who is the plaintiff in a libel suit against Joseph Begin, proprietor of La Croix, alleged to be a pro-religious weekly organ, now being tried before Mr. Justice Delorimier, asked that Rev. Garand be ordered to preserve dignity and decorum of the court, and to forbid the priest from smiling at plaintiff's testimony about Masonic ritual. The judge stated that Mr. Caron could go on, with the assurance that he would not be embarrassed or interfered with while giving his evidence.

The plaintiff claims that La Croix published a story denouncing Masons, and stated that they worshipped hell. In the story he mentioned Mr. Caron, it is alleged by the plaintiff, as a Mason. He contends that the use of his name under those circumstances is not privileged for the purposes of public

It was during the recital of Mr. Caron's testimony relative to the fact that prayers were offered by a priest before initiation in his lodge, which was of the Scottish Rite connection, that the priest smiled. Mr. Caron claims $100 damages.

SENATE TIRED OF IT.

It is Sick of Senator Landry's Many Inquiries.

Ottawa, April 21.—There was quite a breeze in the Senate yesterday when Senator Landry of Quebec was taken by several of his colleagues for his inquisitiveness. He moved for a return of correspondence addressed by the Superintendent of Immigration to P. Doyle, agent at Quebec.

Senator Macdonald said he would move the six months' hoist for the resolution. He said that Senator Landry was up three or four times a sitting asking for information, and the Senate was getting tired of it.

Senator Power thought the statute of limitations should apply, too much work was involved in going back to 1896.

Senator Landry said he would change the motion and ask for papers back only to 1908.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell declared that a Senator had the right to get any information from the official records.

The amendment for the six months hoist was declared lost and the motion carried.

Ottawa Protestants Aroused.

Ottawa, April 21.—Protestants throughout the capital are now widely discussing the ne temere marriage decree, and no less than three denominational bodies in which Ottawa are interested will have something to say regarding it within the next few weeks.

It is almost certain to be referred to by committee and of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Canada when it convenes at Knox Church, Ottawa, on June 1st. It will come up in committee and probably be talked over by the assembly and a resolution opposing it may be voted on.

An Anglican sub-committee sometime ago was appointed to consider this and other marriage questions. They will meet at Lauder Memorial Hall in May, and a resolution that they will draft will be presented at the annual meeting of the synod of Ottawa here in June.

Why He Opposes Annexation.

Washington, D.C., April 21.—Webb, Democrat, of North Carolina, who split with the party and will vote against reciprocity, yesterday afternoon discussed the attitude of those who favor the treaty in the hope that it will produce annexation of Canada.

"In that class," said he, "is my friend Ebenezer Hill, of Connecticut, and there are many others throughout the country who want closer trade relations with Canada in order to induce the annexation of that country. I am opposed to annexation, for this country is already big enough. I would drop the Philippines if I could. Another reason why I oppose annexation, is that there are in Canada a large number of people of the Latin race. The whole history of that race is that they will not accept Republican doctrines. They are natural monarchists. They must always look towards a king."

A case of smallpox has been discovered in the St. Lawrence Hotel at Pembroke and the place has been quarantined with about twenty people. The disease was brought from a northern lumber camp.

A Montreal woman reported to the police that her husband was hanging himself. The officials wrote him a letter asking for an explanation of his conduct, and when the bearer of the letter reached the house the man was dead.

Did Business by Mail.

New York, April 21.—Four proprietors and managers of medical institutes are in the Tombs to-day, charged with the illegal use of the mails, and a fifth is out on $5,000 bail, as the result of raids conducted by postal inspectors yesterday. Three institutions were raided, eighteen witnesses taken and tons of advertising literature printed in fifteen languages, were confiscated.

The establishments were the Dr. Ferdinand Hartman Institute, the Universal Medical Institute and the Vienna Medical and Electrical Institute. They catered, apparently, to foreign-born invalids exclusively, for not a page of advertising matter written in English was found at any of the concerns. The raiding inspectors declared that the three firms did an aggregate business of $200,000 annually, obtained chiefly by advertising in American publications printed in foreign languages.

FAR VISION
Without Lines in the Lens

The only near-and-far glasses that can be universally worn without discomfort and without suggestiveness of "old" appearance. The "near" and the "far" lenses are one solid glass. No "lines," no cement—and perfect sight with the discomfort and unsightliness left out. They cost more than the ordinary 'cement bifocals' but if you are particular of comfort and appearance they are worth the difference. We have scores of people in this city using these Kryptoks who are highly pleased with them.

THE BLACK CROSS

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

The music broke into a mad riot of rhythm; the violins seemed to run races with one another in an intoxication of sound, pulsing, penetrating, overpowering. The white figure twirled in the Princes' arms, her gold hair a blot against the scarlet of his sleeve, faster and faster. Her head drooped; her eyes closed again.

The rhythm was alive, tempting, subtle, like a madness in the veins; and as they whirled, the rubato, dreamy, sudden, caught them as in a leash; the steps faltered, slower, still slower until the music stopped, dying away into the dome of the vault in a last faint echo of sound.

The Countess swayed suddenly.

Her face was white as the lace on her bosom, and her eyes grew dark and big, with black shadows sweeping her cheeks. Others stepped forward to the dance; their places were filled and the music commenced again.

"Lean on me," whispered the Prince. "Are you ill? Countess, lean on my arm—so."

His voice was hoarse and excited. He was swaying a little himself from the intoxication of the dance.

"Take me away somewhere, some quiet place," she whispered back. "Let me rest—I am faint."

He drew her after him and the two figures, the scarlet and the white passed under the archway into a salon beyond. The Prince raised a curtain. "This is the Duke's own room" he said in her ear, "Go under—be quick."

The curtain fell heavily behind them and the two stood alone in the Grand-Duke's room. There was a desk in the corner littered with papers, a lamp stood beside, heavily shaded, and back in the shadowy recesses was a couch.

"Help me there," whispered the Countess, "And then go—go, Prince, leave me. My head is on fire! See, my cheeks, my hands, how they burn. Help me to the couch."

She staggered and almost fell as they approached it burying her face in her hands.

"I can't leave you," said the Prince He was on his knees beside her, kissing her hands, trying to draw them down from her face. "Kaya, what is the matter? Don't hide your eyes—look at me. Shall I call some one? Are you ill?"

The Countess drew back against the cushions, shuddering, pushing him from her: "Don't call any one" she said, "Give me that water on the table there." Her eyes were wide open now and dilated; the hair fell disordered in golden rings and waves about the oval of her face. She drew her breath heavily; her bosom rising and falling like waves after a storm. One hand pressed her face as if to clutch the pulsing and steady it; the other held the glass to her trembling lips.

The Prince hovered over the couch. He was pale and the crossing of his eyes was more pronounced than ever. "Drink now," he whispered soothingly as if to a child in trouble. "Drink it slowly. It is wine, not water, and will bring back your strength. It was the dance; ah, it was so fast, so mad. You were wonderful! The blood beats in my veins still; I can feel the rhythm throbbing, can you? Speak to me, Countess—are you better—"

"Is any one here," said the girl faintly. "Are we alone?"

"Yes, yes, we are alone."

"Will the Duke come in?"

"Not yet. Put your head back against the cushions and rest. The colour is gone from your cheeks and you are pale like a broken flower. Listen—do you hear the violins in the distance? Your feet move like mine; every pulse in your body is tingling and throbbing. Rest; don't speak, and in a moment—Kaya—"

Again the Countess pushed him back, her blue eyes sparkling, flashing on his: "Prince, hush! Don't speak to me like that. You don't know, how can you! Poor boy—poor boy! Don't look at me; I tell you, don't look at me. In the dusk it might be the Duke himself, his very self! Go—Leave me a little. If he were good like you—but you will be bad, too, when you are older, wicked, cruel—the blood is there in your veins. You will be like the rest. Keep away from me, Michel. Don't kiss my hands, not—my—hands!"

The Countess tore them away and gazed at the young officer, her eyes wild and dilated. She gave a little cry as of pain.

"No—no! I can bear all the rest, but not this—not this! Get up off your knees, Prince. Leave me—leave me for a little while—I must think; I must be alone and think."

Her hair sparkled and gleamed against the cushions. One hand was still clasped to her breast. He stooped over her, panting.

"Come and dance with me, Kaya—dearest. You are well now; your cheeks are like roses. The wine is so strong when one is giddy. Let me put my arms about you—come! I love you. Ah, your hair is like a halo; your lips are trembling. The tears in your eyes are like dew, Kaya."

The Countess rose slowly to her feet. "Yes, you are like your father already," she cried, "Already you are cowardly. You are strong and you think I am weak." Her head was thrown back; she measured him scornfully, "Go and dance, sir. Leave me, I tell you."

The Prince held out his hands. "Leave you!" he cried, "No, Kaya, no. Come and dance."

"Leave me—leave me."

He came nearer: "Are you still faint? Will you rest and let me come back? When? How soon?"

"Leave me."

He took out his watch: "Nearly midnight," he cried, "then the Duke will return. When the clock strikes, Kaya, it will be our dance. You will waltz with me, then—once more? As soon as the clock strikes?"

"Leave me."

"A quarter of an hour, Kaya, no more. I will send word to Boris. He will guard the curtain so no one will enter, unless it is the Duke himself. As soon as the clock strikes, you promise, we will waltz together?"

"Go, Michel, go—I promise."

The Prince made a step forward as though to gather the shrinking figure in his arms. He hesitated; then he moved towards the curtain; hesitated again and looked behind him. Then the heavy folds fell and the girl was alone.

She stood for a moment, watching the folds, then she put her hands to her eyes and swayed as though she were falling.

"God!" she cried, "Must I do it? Is there no other—no other instrument?" She sobbed to herself in little broken words, catching her breath: "I vow—I vow—without weakness, or hesitation, or mercy—with mine own hands if—needs be."

She staggered forward, still sobbing and bent over the desk. Something white fluttered and fell from her face; she smoothed it with her fingers—gazed at it.

"God!" she cried, "Oh, God!"

Then she clasped her breast again and drew something out, something dark and hard. She gave a startled glance about the room, covering it with her arms; her form shivering as though in a chill.

"In the name of the Black Cross I swear—I swear—"

Then she crept back to the couch and sank on the floor behind it, covering her face with her hands. As she did so, the door on the corridor opened a crack, then wider, slowly wider, and some one came in. The form was that of a man. He looked about him. The room was still, deserted, and he gave a sigh of relief, hurrying over to the desk. When he turned up the lamp, the light revealed a bundle of papers which he laid on the desk, examining them one after the other, putting his face close to the lamp, studying, absorbed.

The face was that of the Grand-Duke Stepan; his beaked nose, his grey, upturned moustache, his eyes small and crossed. They were fixed on the sheets. All of a sudden he started violently.

Beside him on the desk, just under the lamp, was a slip of paper. There was nothing on the paper but a Black Cross graven, above it Gmeptb.

As the Duke gazed at it, his face grew ashen, his mouth twitched, his eyes seemed fairly to start from his head; his knees knocked together. He glanced fearfully around, trying vainly to steady his hands.

"Without weakness, without hesitation, or mercy, by mine own hands if needs be, I swear—"

Was it a voice shrieking in his ears? He cowered backwards, huddled together, shivering.

"I swear—"

Suddenly there came the click of a revolver. A shot rang out; a moan. The Duke stood motionless for a second; then he faltered, twisted, and fell on his face with his arms outstretched.

CHAPTER V.

It was snowing steadily. The drops came so thick and so fast that the city was shrouded as in a great white veil, falling from the sky to the earth. Drifts were piled in the streets; they were frozen and padded as with a carpet, and the sound of sleighbells rang muffled in the distance. It was night and dark, with a bitter wind that came shrieking about the corners, blowing the snow, as it fell, into a riot of feathery flakes; sudden gusts that raided the drifts, driving the white maze hither and thither, flinging it up and away in a very fury of madness. The cold was intense.

Before the door of a house on the little Morskaia stood a kareta. It was large and covered. Behind and on top several boxes were strapped, protected from the snow by wrappings of oil-cloth, and on the driver's seat was a valise.

The horses pawed the snow impatiently, tossing their heads and snorting whenever the icy blast struck them. The wind was sharp like a whip. Occasionally the kareta made a sudden lurch forward; then, with guttural oaths and exclamations, the animals were reined back on their haunches, slipping and sliding on the ice, plunging and foaming. The foam turned to ice as it fell, flecking their bits. The breath from their nostrils floated out like a vapour, slender and hoary.

The driver, muffled in furs, swung his arms against his breast, biting his fingers, stamping his feet to keep them from freezing. The kareta, the driver and the horses were covered with snow, lashed by it, blinded with it. They waited wearily. From time to time the driver glanced up at the door of the house and then back at the carriage, shaking his head and muttering fiercely:

"Stand still, you sons of the devil, stand still! You prance and shy as if Satan himself had stuck a dart in you! Hey, there!—Back, back, you limb! Will the Barin never come?"

He swore vigorously to himself under his breath, and the flakes fell from him in a shower. After a while the door of the house opened; some one appeared on the steps and a voice called out:

"Bobo, eh Bobo! Is that you, are you ready? Heavens, what a night!"

"All ready, Monsieur Velasco, all ready."

"The boxes on?"

"Yes, Barin."

"You took my valise, did you?"

"Yes, Barin."

The figure disappeared for an instant within the doorway, and the light went out; then he reappeared, carrying a violin-case under his arm, which he screened from the wet with the folds of his cloak, carefully, as a mother would cover the face of her child. He leaped to the carriage.

"All right, Bobo, go ahead. Wait a moment until I get the latch open. Ye gods! I never felt such cold. My fingers are like frozen sticks. There! Now, the Station: Warchavski Vokzal—as fast as you can! Ugh, what a storm!"

The Stomach Needs Held

The Liver, Kidneys and Bowels Must Be Kept Active to Ensure Health

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Not one person in a hundred can get along at this time of year, without using something to enliven the action of the liver, kidneys and bowels.

Too much eating of heavy artificial foods, too little outdoor exercise, this is the explanation.

The liver and kidneys are overworked in their efforts to remove the poisonous waste matter from the system. They fail and become torpid and clogged. The bowels become constipated and stomach derangements follow.

There is one medicine which will overcome this condition more certainly and more quickly than any other, and this is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

This medicine gets the bowels in action at once and by awakening the liver and kidneys ensures the thorough cleansing of the filtering and excretory systems.

With the poisonous obstructions removed, the digestive system resumes its healthful condition, appetite improves, pains and aches disappear as well as irritability and depression.

You cannot imagine a more satisfactory treatment for biliousness, constipation, backache and kidney disease than Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Could Not Rest at Night.

Back Was So Weak.

Weak, lame and aching backs are the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning from the kidneys that everything is not right with them.

Heed the warning: cure the weak, lame, aching back and dispose of any chances of further trouble.

If you don't do this, serious complications are very apt to arise and the first thing you know you will be troubled with Dropsy, Diabetes or Bright's Disease, the three most deadly forms of Kidney Trouble.

On the first sign of anything wrong Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go to the seat of the trouble and strengthen the kidneys, thereby strengthening the back.

Mrs. John Puigh, Parkdale, Man., writes:—"I have used Doan's Kidney Pills and find nothing to beat them. I could not rest at night my back was so weak. I tried everything, but could not get anything to do me any good until I was told by a friend to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I tried them and I am not the same weak woman I was before. I am very thankful to have found so speedy a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Holder was to "Pound His Feet" All the Evening

In overhauling some old memoranda, Judge C. A. Nye, of Moorehead, Minn., discovered a pass admitting himself and family to a lecture delivered in Fargo, Sept. 18, 1890, by his brother, the famous humorist, Bill Nye. On the back of the pass was written in Bill Nye's own hand: "The conditions of this pass are that the holder must mirthfully pound his feet on the floor during the entire evening, whether he wants to or not."

LEGENDS OF ST. PATRICK

The Greatest of His Miracles Was the Driving of Venomous Reptiles Out of Ireland

It is wonderful how many Irishmen there are in Canada on the seventeenth of March! Everyone who has the slightest strain of Irish blood displays it on that day, and so many boys and girls come to school decorated with a bit of Paddy green ribbon or a shamrock-leaf in memory of the patron saint of Ireland.

St. Patrick was born about 372, and was of noble parentage, but when 16 years of age he was carried off by pirates who sold him into slavery in Ireland. There he was employed for seven years as a swineherd, and learned the Irish customs and language. He escaped from captivity and reached the continent where he prepared for the priesthood and was ordained bishop. He then with the authority of the Pope, returned to Ireland to preach the gospel to its inhabitants. It is said that St. Patrick made use of the shamrock-leaf to illustrate the Trinity of God, and since then it has become the emblem of that saint.

The principal enemies that St. Patrick found in Ireland were the Druid priests whose enmity was so great that St. Patrick was obliged to curse their fertile lands so that they became dreary bogs; to curse their rivers so that they produced no fish; to curse their very kettles so that with no amount of fire could they be made to boil; and at last to curse the Druids themselves so that the earth opened and swallowed them up.

A popular legend relates that the saint and his followers were one cold morning upon a mountain without fire to cook their breakfasts or warm their limbs. Patrick told them to collect a pile of snowballs which he breathed upon, and they instantly became a pleasant fire.

The greatest of St. Patrick's miracles was that of driving venomous reptiles out of Ireland, and rendering the Irish soil for ever after hateful to the serpent race. Some historians relate that St. Patrick accomplished this feat by beating a drum, which he struck so hard that he knocked a hole in it. This would have endangered the success of the miracle had not an angel appearing, mended the drum. The patched instrument was long exhibited as a holy relic.

In 1831, an Irish gentlemen being anxious to learn whether the climate or soil of Ireland was destructive to serpents, brought half a dozen harmless snakes from England and turned them loose in his garden. A week later one was killed and the idea that a "rale living sarpint" had been found near the burial place of St. Patrick caused a great sensation among the country people and somewhat shook their faith in their beloved saint, but they have quite recovered it, if one can judge by the number of people throughout Ireland that on the seventeenth of March are wearing the green. —Canadian Farm.

WOMEN POISONERS

Are Greater Than Men—Some Famous Poison Mysteries of the Past are Recalled

The Dalkeith poisoning mystery, which had such a sensational termination, is in some respects akin to a tragedy which, in 1815, created a most painful sensation throughout England. On April 11th of that year a servant girl, Eliza Fenning, was charged at the Old Bailey with having poisoned the family with whom she was in service. Arsenic, the poison employed, had, so it was averred, been fitted with the flour of which certain dumplings were made, with the result that Orlibar Turner, a law stationer of Chancery Lane, his son Robert, his son's wife, and Roger Gadaden, an apprentice, had been seized with violent sickness, to the no little danger of their lives.

The prisoner vehemently protested her innocence, of which, indeed, regarding the evidence dispassionately, there can be little doubt. She was, however, found guilty, and, although the weight of evidence went to prove that the real culprit was Robert Turner, who was subject to fits of dementia, during one of which he had been heard to declare he would poison the family, ultimately executed. Public indignation rose to fever heat, and for many nights the Turners' house in Chancery Lane was besieged by an enraged mob that was with difficulty prevented from wreaking summary vengeance on the objects of its wrath.

A Glasgow Sensation

"Not proven" was the verdict in the case of Madeleine Smith, who, in 1857, was accused of having poisoned her lover, Emile l'Angelier, that she might marry a rich Glasgow merchant named Minnock. The case created general interest, and much sympathy was felt for the prisoner, a girl of great beauty, while but little commiseration was expressed for the victim, who at the best was but a mean rascal and blackmailer. Although the evidence for the prosecution was very strong the judge summed up in Madeleine's favor, and the consequent verdict was received with tumultuous applause in court.

Catherine Wilson was a wholesale poisoner who suffered the extreme penalty for her crimes, in 1862, before a crowd of over 20,000 people. For nearly ten years she escaped detection, during which period she is known to have poisoned a Mr. Dixon, a Mrs. Soames, a Mrs. Jackson, for the sake of £120, and in 1860 a Mrs. Atkinson, of Kirkby Lonsdale, a milliner, who, with £100 about her person, was on a visit to town to buy goods! Besides these callous crimes there were other attempts at murder, one that of a Mrs. Connell, to whom she administered—fortunately without fatal result—oil of vitriol. For this, indeed, she was charged at the Marylebone Police Court, but for want of reliable evidence balked justice for the time being.

Coffee and Arsenic

Very similar to the career of Catherine Wilson were those of Anna Zwanziger and Helene Jegado. The former after an adventurous life, during which she was by turns confectioner, dollmaker, cook, housekeeper, and schoolmistress, took service with a certain Judge Glaser, whose wife, her first victim, she poisoned with arsenic in the hope of marrying the widower. Her design, however, coming to naught, she passed to the household of Herr Grohmann, who succumbed to her fatal administrations, as did also the wife of her next master, Herr Gebhard. From this situation she was at length dismissed, and left one morning, having previously doctored the coffee with powdered arsenic, with which also she filled up the salt-box. Soon after her departure the family were taken violently ill, and suspicion being directed against Zwanziger, she was finally arrested and, after a protracted trial, sentenced to death.

The career of crime of Helene Jegado, a native of Brittany, was of longer duration, extending over some eighteen years, during which period thirty victims at least may be placed to her account. "I am a wretched creature; wherever I go people die," she exclaimed, previous to entering a convent, whose inmates soon experienced the fatal influence of her presence. From convent to convent, from family to family, she passed, leaving everywhere death in her wake, until at length, in 1851, retribution overtook her. She was accused of having poisoned a fellow-servant at an inn where she was employed, and, the crime having been fully brought home, she was convicted and executed.

DYSPEPSIA Can Be Cured.

This disease is the all prevailing malady of civilized life, and one which oftenest baffles all ordinary treatment. It gives rise to a great variety of distressing symptoms, such as distress after eating, rising and souring of food, wind in the stomach, heartburn, etc.

Nearly everything that enters a weak dyspeptic stomach acts as an irritant; hence the great difficulty of effecting a cure.

The long train of distressing symptoms, which render life a burden to the victim of dyspepsia, may be promptly cured by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

B.B.B. regulates the stomach, liver and bowels, stimulates secretion of the saliva and gastric juice to facilitate digestion, purifies the blood, and tones up the entire system.

Mrs. Herman Dickens, Benton, N.B., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters and find that few medicines can give such relief in dyspepsia and stomach troubles. I was troubled for a number of years with dyspepsia, and could get no relief until I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. I took three bottles and became cured, and I can now eat anything without it hurting me. I will highly recommend it to all who are troubled with stomach trouble."

THE ARGONAUTS ESCAPE FROM THE JUNGLE

How He Watched the Chief Die of Snake Bite, Crawled Miles in a Delirium, and at Last Was Rescued by Cannibals

THIS is the second half of the remarkable story of Mr. Algot Lange, formerly photographer of the Pathological Institute, who has recently returned from the regions of the Amazon. In his first article Mr. Lange told how, lured by the unknown, he accompanied a party of native rubber hunters into the virgin wilderness far inland, where no white man had ever before ventured. With great difficulty they penetrated nine days' march into the jungle and encamped while caoutchouc trees were being discovered and marked. Here they were surprised by starvation, a danger which they had not foreseen and which they did not perceive until all the game disappeared from the vicinity. Fever was also upon them, and it was decided to separate after one of the men had died. Three were to take a course toward a river some distance away. The others, Jerome, the chief and Mr. Lange, were to retrace the way by which they had come.

"He Was On One Knee When the Last Thread Snapped and He Fell Forward with His Face in the Fire"

IT was our hope that by desperate marching we might win clear of the jungle and reach Floresta in six days. The journey into the wilderness had taken nine, but we now had some slight advantage in retracing our former path. Though the lush, reedy growth had already choked it, we were travelling over ground which we knew, and it was no longer necessary to delay over the building of tambos.

Drug driven as we were and spurred by a tense eagerness to hold the stiff pace we had set, we covered the first stage by noon. Jerome complained throughout the morning of a numbness in his fingers and feet and also of an increasing weakness of the heart that made every exertion a torment. The chief and I did our best to cheer him, though I think the poor fellow knew even then what fearful illness had laid its hand upon him. He struggled on bravely, however, and no word of the suspicion that oppressed us all was exchanged.

After a brief halt at tambo No. 8 we pressed on. We marched as automatons rather than as men. Suffering, hunger and drugs had dulled our nerves, and only the will to escape somehow, anyhow, from the terrible, unending forest was fully awake in us. Motion had become mechanical. A sweep of the machete to clear a barrier from the way, one foot set before the other, and we were that much nearer to safety. Such was the simple operation of our stupefied and weary brains throughout the hours of the day.

At nightfall we stumbled into tambo No. 7. There was no thought of food, no possibility of any to nourish the thought. We had scarce strength enough to throw aside our packs, sling the hammocks and crawl into them. Then to restless slumber that brought no relief and evil dreams through which trod the phantoms of the jungle's vengeance. Death was upon us, toying with us. Jerome's numbness increased during the night.

We were up and on the trail again with the dawn. The stage ahead was one of the most difficult, leading through broken and treacherous land, interspersed with swamps and barred with rocky ridges. We could not expect to do better than reach tambo No. 6 that day. All through the morning we held our course, falling often, picking ourselves up to stagger on and fall again. My hypodermic was now the sole source of our strength, unless I count the ever present fear that dogged at our heels and drove us forward.

In the afternoon we descended a hill to find ourselves confronted by a wide swamp of unusual depth and slipperiness. With my high boots of heavy buffalo hide the swamps held few living dangers for me. My companions were bare legged, and for them the low places were full of peril. The chief was in the lead as we crossed this swamp. Following in his steps I was aware midway of a peculiar movement in the water near me, and presently made out several thin, sinister things that whipped past among the reeds. I cried out in warning to Jerome, for these were the dreaded water snakes of the Amazon country, called by the Brazilians "as jaraycacas." He took care to thrash about him, and we supposed that we had come through without mishap when we rejoined the chief on firmer land.

He was stooping over as we came up to him and he turned a face to us that had beefn stricken into a mask of fear. He pointed to the instep of his right foot, and there on the skin were two tiny spots. There was no need to explain their significance.

Without a word we sank to the ground beside him in despair. There was still a chance, a small chance, that, after all, he had not been bitten by one of the fatal reptiles. The unfortunate man crouched with dilated eyes fixed upon the wound, waiting for the coming of the pain that should presage the deadly poison's work. Even as we watched the foot began to swell and the chief cried out that he was a dead man.

Losing no more time I caused him to lie at full length and prepared for one of those primitive surgical operations which have sometimes wrought heroic cures in the jungle. With my bistouric I made a deep cross cut in the flesh over the spot, causing the blood to flow freely. Jerome had carried his precious muzzle loader throughout the tramp and over his shoulder was slung an ancient powder flask.

I opened the flask and poured about two drachms of the powder into and over the incision and immediately, before the powder was moistened, touched a match to the little heap. This is the traditional remedy for snake bit as used not only in South America but in India and Africa, wherever proper antidotes and means of cauterizing cannot be had.

The chief stood the ordeal without a murmur, never flinching even at the explosion of the powder. Jerome and I made him as comfortable as we could and for three dreary hours we watched a man die by inches.

Watching the Leader Die.

It is no easy thing to see death come upon any man, but as it came in this instance it was terribly harrowing. The chief had been the pillar of strength of the expedition from the start. He it was, with his jungle wisdom, who had planned all our moves, mapped our course through a blind forest, given us our orders. He had proved himself a good leader, save for his one error in too long delaying our return, to which he had been betrayed by overeagerness to render his employer, Colonel da Silva, full and faithful service. He was capable, kindly, human, a good friend to each of us. On him we had leaned, on him we depended for our escape. And it was this man, the sole reliance of Jerome and myself, who now succumbed before our eyes to another of the dangers of the hideous wilderness.

He was beyond all help. Nothing we might do could add in any degree to his failing hold upon life. Some slight relief was vouchsafed him toward the end, when he became light headed and babbled nonsense in his native tongue, no longer conscious of his pain. About four o'clock in the afternoon his respiration grew weaker and his limbs began to twitch. A moment later Jerome laid a trembling hand upon his breast. He was dead.

For the second time during that ill fated journey I set to work with my machete to dig a grave, Jerome lending what aid he could in his enfeebled state. My own condition was such that I was forced to stop and rest between every few stabs of the tool. It seemed a pitiful bit of irony that we two should strive so hard, should spend our strength so conscientiously, to make a last resting place for our companion when we ourselves had no hope but to lie down and die presently in our turn. Then would our case be harder than his, for no friendly hands were near to scrape a trench in which to hide us away from the wild beasts. And still God knows we grudged him no effort in doing his poor body the last simple honors.

We completed the day's stage late in the afternoon, arriving at tambo No. 6 after taking almost an hour for the last half mile. Jerome could now scarcely stand without my assistance. There was no longer any disguising the nature of his trouble. He had beriberi and in our situation he had no shred of a chance of life. Even with the best of care and nursing he could never have recovered, for in those regions the disease is absolutely fatal. We made a fire and got our hammocks up in some fashion, but there was not a scrap of food to be had. The leaves and bark of plants we chewed for some little ease for the gnawing in our stomachs, at risk of absorbing a poison. I am sure this last consideration checked us not at all. Speedy escape from our misery was the best we could look for.

In the morning it was a five minute task for me to get myself out of the hammock and on my feet. Jerome made several painful efforts and finally solved his problem by dropping to the ground. He could not rise until I helped him up. And there we two tottering scarecrows strove with other's packs. Jerome could not make it. He cast from him everything he owned, even the little personal possessions dear to the native heart. Last of all he put aside his muzzle loader, enormously valuable in his eyes, with a gesture of despair more eloquent than words. Propped on a stick for a crutch he made shift to take the trail. It was heartrending to see this young man, able in his strength to handle three or four of his fellows, thus reduced to the extreme of weakness.

The fever, which I had fought off by constant use of the hypodermic, now swept back upon me with renewed violence. The drugs no longer had any effect. It is at this point in the return that my recollections become almost inextricably confused with the vaguer terrors and visions of stark delirium. I know that at times I raved as I staggered on, for at times I came to myself with strange phrases on my tongue addressed to no living man. Always when a saner interval brought coherent thought it was the jungle, the unending, all enveloping, fearful jungle, that was before my mind, something to be evaded, something that surrounded and crushed and pursued me. No wretched survivor of a shipwreck, driven to madness by long tossing on a raft in an empty sea, ever conceived the hatred and horror of the surrounding element that grew upon me out of the fresh, perpetual, monotonous green of the forest.

Along about noon the weight of my pack became intolerable and, imitating Jerome, I sacrificed precious articles. I threw away my camera, most of my plates, utensils, hammock, clothing—everything that I could bring myself to do without. What was more difficult, I abandoned the greater part of my gold. I have referred in the previous article to my discovery of the precious metal, some few details of which are necessary.

It was while our party was encamped at Tambo No. 9 that a fruitless hunting excursion brought me to a small, shallow creek. On the bed of the stream I noticed a number of irregular balls or lumps of clay. They had the appearance of pebbles. Their peculiar formation, weight and adhesiveness aroused my curiosity. On cutting one in halves I found a centre of yellowish grains, forming a mass of about one cubic inch. About this node was a layer of hard clay, about an inch in thickness. By scraping a node free of the clay and rigging up a makeshift specific gravity balance from my photographic outfit I established that it was composed of gold. A further test with the mercury taken from a broken clinical thermometer removed all doubt. Returning to the creek I collected enough grains in less than five hours to fill four photographic plate boxes. I might as easily have filled a barrel.

Collapse of Jerome.

The gold had now become a mockery, and after having carried it so many weary steps I discarded all except one box full. Besides this I retained my knife and automatic pistol, the magnifying glass and the hypodermic outfit with a few drugs. All these things I stuffed into the capacious pockets of my khaki coat and so, unburdened, took up the march once more.

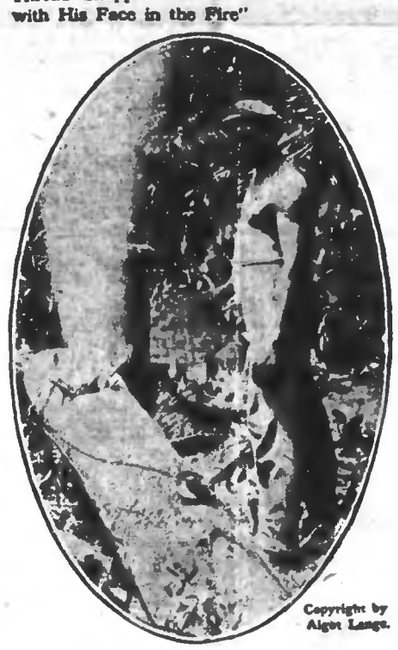
We had gone perhaps a mile further, to the ascent of a little hill, when Jerome collapsed. The poor fellow owned himself utterly beaten. He said that he should now die very quickly, and that I must hasten on while I still had strength. The instant prospect of another loss, which would leave me alone in the frightful jungle, aroused me for a time from my exhaustion and feverish preoccupation. I got him to a dry spot and dragged together some branches where with I started a fire. I left him sitting beside the blaze while I ventured some little distance off the trail in search of the saplings of the mormorn plant. The heart leaves are edible, tasting somewhat of nuts, but leaving an acrid taste and filling the mouth with slime. I found some of these leaves and made the best of my way back to Jerome.

He was beyond eating my miserable offering, beyond even recognizing me. He lay by the fire, breathing long, wheezing breaths, and his face was horribly distorted, like that of a man in a fit of violent insanity or one who composes shrieking grimaces to frighten folks. He babbled incessantly to himself and broke off only to stare at me strangely, throw back his head and burst into a shrill shriek of laughter that made my flesh creep.

The thing appalled me, and my own sickness and weakness sapped away the little energy I had summoned. I threw myself to the ground some little distance from the fire and thought never to rise again. My last deliberate act was to shoot a double dose into my arm with the hypodermic.

I have no means of knowing how long it was before a weird, piercing cry aroused me from my stupor. I raised my head from my arms and looked about. It was fading daylight. The smoke from the bed of red embers rose straight among the upper arches of the forest. There was no sound from out the jungle, no stir of air to break its dead, blanketing silence. Again the cry sounded. I turned toward Jerome, who I now saw had voiced it.

The man's eyes were protruding from his head and his dark skin had flushed crimson. As I watched him he cried out once more and tried to scramble to his feet. He was on one knee when the last thread snapped and he fell forward with his face in the fire. I saw this as through a hazing veil, and almost instantly my reason went out again.



Jerome

Copyright by Algot Lange.

I have no clear knowledge of what happened to me throughout the rest of that terrible day and the terrible night that followed it. My madness descended upon me mercifully at intervals. Snatches of my thoughts and sufferings, my hopelessness and despair, come to me as part of an ordeal I can never recall without a shudder. It was nightfall before I was able to arouse myself from my collapse. The fire was almost out. Poor Jerome still lay among the embers. I did not have the courage, if I had had the strength, to pull the body away, for there could be nothing of the face left by now. I looked at him once, and then, because I could not stand, I began to crawl away along the trail.

"Time to be on the march, the march, the march." This was the message that throbbed in my aching head. It was the dread of the jungle that had pursued me since we began the retreat that now lashed me into action when I could scarce move a limb. And so this same dread was to prove my salvation at the last.

One definite incident of that night I remember all too vividly. It came at one of the recurrent periods when my mind cleared a little and I could understand dimly where I was and what I was about. I was crawling through a thicket, making slow and painful progress in the dark, when something bumping against my thigh bothered and impeded me. I clutched at it and my hand closed about the butt of my automatic pistol.

The weapon came out of its holster in my grasp without any conscious direction. But as I crouched there and felt my finger fit into the curve of the trigger, I knew that some numbed and exhausted corner of my brain had surrendered and had prompted me to this thing. Indeed, as I considered it with what calmness and logic I could bring to bear, it did not seem particularly wild or wicked. With my pistol in my hand and the first movement already accomplished I believed that it would be easy, pleasant even, to go the rest of the way. There was no shadow of hope for me. I knew that I was brought to the very verge of starvation. For eight days I had had hardly a mouthful of real food. The fever had me completely in its grasp. More than all else, I was now alone in the vast, brooding solitude of the jungle.

I measured the tenaciousness of the love of life as I fought with the temptation in my delirium. Surely no man could have been brought lower or to greater extremity, no man ever faced a blacker situation. And yet I could not or would not yield, and after a time I thrust the weapon back to its holster.

All night long I crawled on all fours through the underbrush. I had no sense of direction, having long since lost the faint trail toward Tambo No. 5. And still I must have covered a considerable distance. I am now certain that I did not move in a circle, as random wanderers are said always to do. Perhaps I followed unconsciously some trend of the ground, some dip or outcrop that kept me upon a definite course. Whatever the explanation, I had no thinking share in it. The dread of the jungle drove me on as it had from the first step of the return. Beyond the dogged physical effort to keep in action I had ceased to contribute to my fate. For hours I moved on, at the mercy of any prowling beast of prey.

The damp chill of the morning usual to these regions came upon me with a cooling touch and restored me once more to some slight degree of sanity. My clothes were almost torn from me and smeared with mud, my hands were torn and my knees masses of bruises. I have a vague remembrance of hearing a sound like the barking of a dog and of changing my direction to head for it. If I had been capable of thought I would have put it aside as another product of delirium, I suppose.

Saved by Indians.

Suddenly, as I drew myself through a leafy barrier I found myself staring into a clearing about a city block in extent. To my confused vision it seemed to me that I saw men and women and houses and that parrots were screaming among the trees and flying across the open space in brilliant flashes of color. I cried aloud and fell forward fainting, while a little yellow, hairy animal sprang upon me and began to lick my face. Then I knew no more.

When I came to myself I was lying in a comfortable hammock in a large dark room. I heard the murmur of many voices beyond the partition and some figure came and looked at me. I did not understand, except that I must be dead or wholly gone mad, and I fell to sleep again. The next thing I remember is an aged woman, with a wonderfully wrinkled face and a piece of wood worked into her under lip in some savage manner of ornamentation. She held a gourd to my lips and I drank therefrom a delicious broth. I blessed her and lapsed once more into unconsciousness.

On the fifth day thereafter, so I learned later, my fever began to abate and I was able to grasp the fact that I had crawled into a native village. I was as weak as a kitten, and, indeed, it has been a marvel to me that I ever came back out of the shadow. The savages, by tender care of me, with strengthening drinks and their own primitive remedies, wrought the miracle and restored life to a man who was as near to death as he well could be. They fed me judiciously, checked my sickness, and when I could make out their meaning assured me that I should stay with them as long as was necessary to restore my strength.

The big room I found to be a colossal hut, forty feet high and one hundred and fifty feet in diameter, thatched with palm leaves and with sides formed of the stems of the pachiuba tree. It was the communal residence of the tribe. A single door and an opening in the centre of the roof over the fire were the only openings. In this place two hundred and fifty-eight natives slept each night, the men in hammocks, the women and children on the ground.

The next day I could get out of my hammock, though I could not stand without the aid of the two women who had been told off to nurse me. Walking between these supporters I was taken before the chief in the outer compound. I addressed him in Spanish and Portuguese and in the tribal dialect, of which I had acquired a smattering from my former companions. All efforts were useless. He let me know by friendly signs that I should return to the hut and that I would not be molested. His tribe was one that occupied an almost unknown region and had had almost no contact with whites or with the less savage peoples near the rivers.

I spent seven weeks among these natives, whom I afterwards identified as the Mangeroma Indians. Their reputation throughout the Amazon country is sinister and many are the dark tales told of their ferocity. I can only say that they accorded me the kindest treatment and that I owe my life entirely to their patience and humanity. On one occasion I had a glimpse of the practices which have given them a bad name. A feast was forward and I saw the preparations. The Mangeromas are cannibals. The fact is not to be denied. Beyond this abhorrent habit I think there are few savage races that would not suffer in comparison with them.

When I was able to resume my journey I parted on the friendliest terms with my hosts and was escorted to the Branco River by a party of them. There they placed me on my way and a walk of six hours brought me to a rubber camp. The owner of the camp took me down by canoe to the mouth of the river, where the large estate of La Compagnie Transatlantique de Caoutchouc is situated. The manager of the place sent two men with me by water to Floresta, whence I had started into the wilderness.

Colonel da Silva had long since given me up as dead and received me warmly. I told him of the deaths of Jerome and the chief, and I learned from him for the first time that the three other members of the party, from whom we had separated at tambo No. 9 on that ill fated day of the return, had escaped from the jungle in safety. After three more weeks I was able to go by launch to Remate de Males, then by canoe to the mouth of the Javary River, and at last, on the Amazon itself, I got passage by the Napo, an English steamer bound from Iquitos, Peru, to New York.

My one box of gold dust I sold for $4,500. If I were assured of that much for every minute of my stay I would not again venture into that fearful jungle. I have never recovered from the sufferings it inflicted upon me, probably never shall. The worst moments I have now are those when, in dreams, I imagine myself once more in the clutches of the unknown, lost in the endless forest and compassed about by the vast, impenetrable, pitiless wall of green.

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well.

Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good." Accept no secret nostrum in place of this non-secret remedy. It contains not a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drugs. Is a pure glycerine extract of healing, native American roots.

MAKE YOUR OWN COMPARISON BETWEEN

St. Lawrence Sugar

AND ANY OTHER KIND YOU KNOW OF

Test it in every possible way, and thus satisfy yourself that ST. LAWRENCE GRANULATED is the purest and therefore the best sugar for you to use.

See Prof. Hersey's report which says that analysis shows St. Lawrence Sugar "to contain 99 99/100 to 100 per cent of pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever."

Look at the sugar itself—its perfect crystals, its sparkling clearness. Test its matchless sweetness ; then you will understand why St. Lawrence Granulated has no superior for purity and quality.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

THE cynic of our circle had recently bought himself a horse.

The cynic admits that he is not so good a judge of horses as he is — or thinks he is — of men, and as the purchase represented the fulfillment of a lifelong denied ambition, the cynic was anxious, delightfully, humanly, just-like-the-rest-of-us anxious to see how his horse would turn out.

She went beautifully for two or three days.

We were all duly called upon to admire her fine points, her small head and feet, her glossy coat, her broad chest, her excellent knee action.

The cynic was happy. So happy that he almost forgot he was a cynic. So happy that he even forgave when Molly passed over the fine points and said she'd rather have a horse with less knee action and more of a mane and tail.

And then one morning the beloved animal was not taken for her daily trot.

"The horse is gone bad," he explained. "Her front legs are stiff. The stable people don't seem to know what's the matter. They say she'll probably be all right in a few days, but I can't get anything real definite out of them. All they'll do is squint at her legs and look wise. I'll bet the animal goes lame for good. Just my luck."

Of course we all promptly tried to cheer him up—even Molly graciously joined in the assurance that, of course, the horse would be better in a day or two.

And then the author-man's wife came in and heard the news.

"Well, now isn't that queer?" she gloated—yes, "gloated" is the proper word. "Do you know my father had a horse once that did just like that. She went splendidly for a day or two after he bought her, and then went stiff all of a sudden and was never good for anything again. The veterinary said she must have had something the matter with her feet in the first place, and that something must have been injected into them to make her go all right for a day or two. Father kept her for awhile and then sold her to a tin peddler for fifty dollars. And he paid three hundred and fifty for that horse. Your horse makes me think of her a lot, too, in her knee action and the way her feet are shaped. Now, isn't that funny?

The lady-who-always-knows-somehow came in just about then and reinforced our assurances that the horse would surely be all right in a day or two, and that the case the author-man's wife had told about was different in a great many ways, but the cynic was beyond reach of optimism.

Sweet of the author-man's wife, wasn't it?

And of all her kind who always have a dismally suggestive story of a trouble quite similar to yours which ended most disastrously.

You fall and hurt your knee a bit and the doctor orders you to bed for a day or two, and they promptly remembled that "Aunt Liza, who fell very much the way you did, was in bed eighteen weeks and in dreadful pain most of the time."

Your maid acts strangely, and they promptly recall how "Mrs. S.'s maid did things just like that, and she turned out to be an ether fiend and set the house afire in one of her crazy spells."

You find—but why multiply examples?

Everybody knows the type.

Everybody suffers from it at one time or another.

And everybody—I fancy—has much the same opinion of it.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, April 20.—There was a decided improvement in the foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat and sales of 100,000 bushels were made at an advance in prices of 3d to 4½d per quarter, and at the close there were a number of orders in the market for more, but the bids were out of line with the advance in prices in Winnipeg. The demand for spring wheat flour for export account was good, all the offers made over the table last night being accepted and millers steadily advanced their prices to foreign buyers.

Wall Fell; Two Injured.

Cornwall, April 21.—Dr. W. H. Craig, D.V.S., was probably seriously injured yesterday afternoon while assisting in tearing down one of the old landmarks of Cornwall, a brick building on Second street west. He and a man named William Roderick were on the second floor of the building, pulling on a rope, when the south wall fell, taking the two men and floor into the cellar. Dr. Craig was badly bruised about the head and body by falling timbers and bricks, and was carried to his residence across the road in an unconscious condition. Roderick escaped with an injured ankle.

The building in question was erected over sixty years ago, and was first used as a newspaper office by the late Watson Lyle, who issued a paper called The Constitutional.

ATTACK TO-NIGHT

Unless Diaz Resigns in Meantime Madero Announces That He Will Commence Operations This Evening

MAKES STATEMENT

Special to The Examiner.

JUAREZ, MEXICO, APRIL 21—Madero promised peace envoys this morning that he would not attack the Diaz entrenchments around the city till late this afternoon, providing no advance was made on him from the rear. In the meantime both forces are strongly fortified and have lots of ammunition. The insurrecto leader says the attack will surely begin before sunset if Diaz does not resign in the meantime. All parties seem relieved that United States intervention is not likely at present.

HE SENT HIS "BEST" REMEDY

The young daughter of Mrs. T. S. Dougall, 523 Flora Avenue, Winnipeg, was arranging some of her doll's washing on a clothes rack, beside the stove, when she fell, and her hand came in contact with the hot stove. She sustained a serious burn, and her screams brought her mother quickly to the spot.

"I sent to the druggist for the best remedy he had for burns," she says, "and he sent back a box of Zam-Buk. He said that there was nothing to equal it. I applied this, and it soothed the pain so quickly that the child laughed through her tears. I bound up the hand in Zam-Buk, and each day aplied Zam-Buk frequently and liberally, until the burn was quite cured.

"The little one was soon able to go on with her play, and we had no trouble with her during the time the burn was being healed."

Zam-Buk Soap should also be used by all mothers for baby's bath and for skin troubles, rashes, pimples, etc.

All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at fifty cents box; and Soap at 25c. tablet. Post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse harmful imitations.

EVIDENCE HEARD IN THE CHARGE AGAINST SHEARER

Grain-Stealing Case Occupies Attention of Magistrate Dumble All Day—Nothing Against Other Two Prisoners Who at Request of Crown Attorney Were Allowed to Go

Ross McColl, John Copperwaite, and Joe Shearer appeared for the third time before his Worship Magistrate Dumble, in the Police Court, this morning. It will be remembered that the three young men were charged with stealing fifty bags of feed from the Quaker Oats Co. They pleaded not guilty to the charge on previous occasions, and did the same this morning. The case was postponed a week ago, on account of Mr. L. Houdrey, the owner of the mill, from which the feed was supposed to be sold, not being able to be present on account of illness.

The case lasted all morning, until 12 o'clock, without any conclusion being arrived at, and then the Court adjourned until 2.30 this afternoon.

Stanley Garrett, son of Mr. Sidney Garrett, of Otonabee, was the first witness called this morning. He gave much the same evidence as was given by previous purchasers, stating that when he called for seed peas, he was met by Shearer, and offered the cheap feed. Mr. Garrett also stated that he had not seen Mr. Houdrey there on any occasion, it being Shearer that always met him.

Crown Attorney R. E. Wood asked that McColl and Copperswaite be allowed to go, as no evidence had been given against them. This was granted and they departed.

Mr. Louis Houdrey then took the witness box and gave evidence to the effect that he never gave permission to any person to sell any of the feed out of his mill, but he said that he was usually away from 11 a.m. until 1 or 2 p.m., and the doors were left open. He said that Shearer had been working for him until a month and one-half after Christmas, when he dismissed him, but he said that he had seen him around the mill at different times after that. He also explained that the Quaker Oats Co. had rented part of his establishment for storing their feed in, and had several thousand bags stored there, and that some of the top bags had burst open, allowing about 50 bags of grain to go all over the floor. The foreman of the Company said that he stuff was damaged and of no use to them and told Mr. Houdrey that he could do what he wished with it.

Mr. Houdrey said that it had been bagged up, but that he did not know of any person selling it.

At this stage of the proceedings the case was adjourned until 2.30 p.m.

At 2.30 this afternoon the charge and a conviction was finally made. His Worship Magistrate Dumble reserved sentence for a few days, to consider the case.

Mr. W. H. Denham, Superintendent of the Quaker Oats Co., was put in the box, and gave evidence to the effect that he did not give any of the "Red Dog" flour or sweepings to Mr. Houdrey, and that if Mr. Houdrey sold any of the Quaker Oats Co. stuff stored there, the proceeds of the sale would be the property of the Quaker Oats Co., but he had no such permission. He was asked if the Company's Assistant Shipper, Mr. Wm. Garvey, would have authority to give stuff away, and replied in the negative. Also that no person except himself could give that permission. He said the "Red Dog" flour stored there was worth $2.10 per cwt., and the ground oat hulls on the floor would be worth about 75c per cwt.

Little eleven-year-old Gerald Shearer, the prisoner's brother, gave evidence. He said that when his brother was working for Houdrey, that he was down there, and he told Houdrey one day that he could get a certain man to purchase some of the feed. Houdrey told him he did not want him, but when the Boss was away to dinner to try and get some farmers to come to the mill and buy it. The boy said he tried, but did not succeed.

Mr. Dumble said that he found from the evidence that Shearer had taken advantage of his knowledge of the place, and had got in and sold the feed, and in one instance was caught in the act and fled through a window, and that from that he found it a case of cool robbery. Mr. Dumble said he could do nothing in the case of Houdrey, as no information or charge had been laid against him but that the Company could act now if they chose. Sentence in Shearer's case was then reserved; McColl and Copperswaite were given their freedom.

Sees Back Of Easter Hat But Nebraska Girl Dislocates Neck

ELI, NEB., APRIL 20.—Miss Elsie Stuart succeeded in seeing the back of her new Easter hat, but in so doing she dislocated her neck, tearing some of the ligaments from their fastenings, necessitating her being sent to a hospital at Omaha, there to have the injuries righted.

Miss Stuart was arranged in her Easter best and upon her head was perched a new and stylish hat. Standing in front of a long mirror in her home, she desired to get a back view of herself. Backed up to the mirror she twisted her head until she was almost looking backwards. Then there was a snapping of muscles, sounding much loke the report of a small pistol and Miss Stuart found herself unable to turn her head to the right, the left or forward. She was continually looking backward.

The pain was intense, but the young woman was placed on a special train and hurried to Omaha, where a surgeon pulled the neck back into place, set the face so that it looks to the front.

BRIDE-ELECT CHANGES STOCKINGS AND HER MIND

SEATTLE, WASH., APRIL 20—Leonora Murphy, aged 19 and pretty, and Clyde Rowan of Astoria, Oregon, after having been engaged for four years, were on their way to the minister's to get married, when the bride-to-be discovered a hole in her right stocking just above the shoe top. By the time the two reached the parsonage she decided that the hole would show when she kneeled before the minister. In spite of Rowan's protest she bade the minister and Rowan wait until she could go home and change her stockings. She hadn't been home more than five minutes before she telephoned Rowan he need not wait any longer. She said that while changing her stockings she had also changed her mind and determined not to be married.

TIDE OF ORATORY

In the Discussion on the Canadian Reciprocity Bill Will Be Stopped To-day by the Leaders

AMENDMENTS FORSAKEN

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 21.—When the discussion on the Canadian reciprocity bill was resumed to-day it was evident that the leaders on both sides were anxious to stem the tide of oratory from their followers and bring the bill to a vote before three o'clock. Most of the many amendments presented by enthusiasts will be pitched bodily overboard. There were conferences between the leaders before the session opend this morning, and it is understood that Representative Underwood was given the right to speak last. The Democratic leaders are known to favour using steam roller tactics to force action.

BIG BALLOON IS WRECKED

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, GERMANY, APRIL 21.—The Parseval VI., the very latest dirigible, came to an untimely end this morning, when on the trip from Berlin to Amsterdam, with twelve passengers and crew. A dangling rope caught in a tree top, upsetting her equilibrium, and she nearly turned turtle, but the people clung to a rope. The balloon landed in a swamp and was wrecked. The passengers had a thrilling escape. None were seriously hurt.

$1,000 Refused For A Canary That Talks

PHILADELPHIA, PA., APRIL 20.—Mrs. Peter Carney of 178 North Broad street, this city, is the possessor of probably the greatest ornithological wonder in existence. She owns a talking canary, which has a vocabulary of five words. She was offered $1,000 for the yellow warbler by an emissary of the Zoological Gardens of Ne wYork City after he had determined the songstress could say "Pretty little Peter," "Pretty little baby," or "Pretty little birdie," and that he was a true canary, but Mrs. Carney refused it. The zoologist says the bird is the only one of its species known to have enunciated English.

AN EXTREME CASE OF RED TAPE OCCURS IN MONTREAL

Officials to Whom Woman Complains That Her Husband is About to Commit Suicide, Send a Letter to Man Asking Him to Explain His Conduct—In the Meantime He Hangs Himself.

MONTREAL, APRIL 20. — The red tape connected with the law was well illustrated here yesterday and to-day. While her husband was deliberately building a trap and arranging a noose to hang himself, Mrs. Joseph Bourdon, in wild alarm, went to the Recorder's office and asked the officials to arrest him, or do anything to save his life.

She did not have $3 for a warrant, so the officials, after due deliberation, sent the man a letter asking him to explain his conduct. That was the best thing they could think of.

Before the letter reached him the man was dead, having proceeded with his hanging operations unmolested.

To-day, many hours after Joseph Bourdon had tightened the noose about his neck, a bailiff leisurely approached the house on Papineau avenue with the official document, asking Joseph Bourdon to explain his conduct. His tearful widow had to explain that Joseph Bourdon was dead.

The company intend installing a new invention, in the line of a machine which will make the boxes entirely itself, drive nails and taps and all. This machine was invented a short while ago by Mr. D. J. McLean, manager of the Iron Wheel Co., Lindsay One of these machines has been in operation at Havelock, and has given entire satisfaction, making at an average of 450 boxes per day. The company are also installing a lot of machinery, which will be in readiness for operations in a week's time.

OBJECT TO PAYING WAGES FORTNIGHTLY

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, APRIL 21.—In the Senate Railway Committee, this morning, the Railway Companies put up a vigorous fight against the bill sent up by the Commons to compel the payment of wages to employees fortnightly, instead of monthly. The Grand Trunk said it would cost 50,000 dollars a year to make the change. General Solicitor Cruman, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, declared that the eighty thousand employed on that road were quite satisfied with the present arrangement. Further consideration was deferred till Wednesday next.

The Ministerial Association's Farewell To Dr. Langfeldt

The Ministerial Association to-day tendered to Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, M.A., Ph. D., a farewell banquet. The esteem in which he is held is evidenced by the fact that every member of the Association in town was present. Dr. Langfeldt has been an active and valuable member of the Association for ten years. Kindly reference to his work in the city was made by one representative of each denomination present. The Doctor has been known preeminently as a man of strong views and convictions, and has always with ability and fearlessness expressed them. His work among the sick and the poor was touched upon. His kindly heart ever ministered to these with a faithfulness and acceptability which any minister might well envy. Not unnoticed, too, was his influence in the Ashburnham school. That the boys and girls of Ashburnham were among the best of the city is evidenced by the preference of teachers for Ashburnham, and to Dr. Langfeldt's frequent visits to the school this state of things was largely due. Dr. Langfeldt was unable to reply to the overwhelmingly kind things said of him, and the luncheon closed with singing "Blessed be the tie that binds," and with prayer. Dr. Langfeldt carries to his new parish the prayers and good wishes of all his ministerial colleagues.

CANON ROY'S OPINION

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, APRIL 21.—The Roman Catholic church has accepted the challenge of the Methodist General Conference committee to fight out the legality of the ne temere mixed marriage decree, Rev. Canon Roy, secretary to Archbishop Bruchesi, when his attention was called this morning to the general conference demand on the governments to change the conditions, said: "We are not afraid of anything like that. These are sure to be outside of the Roman Catholic church, but they will quiet down."

"HONEYMOON TRAIL"

One of the distinct novelties of "Honeymoon Trail" the big LaSalle Theatre (Chicago) musical success which is the attraction at The Grand next Tuesday, April 25, is the double quartette of little dancing "brothers" known as "Ned Wayburn's Dancing Brownies." As the Chinaman, Soldier, Dude, Sailor, Policeman, and other well-known Brownie characters they dance with an abandon and cleverness which constitutes the last word in the art of stage terpsichore. Ned Wayburn has taken many notable musical productions, amongst which may be mentioned "The Midnight Sons," "The Gay Hussars," "The Summer Widowers," etc. He has always considered his "Brownie" number in "Honeymoon Trail" the greatest novelty which he has ever produced.

THE FEET IN PRISON

Tightly imprisoned in the modern shoe the feet perspire and the skin is chafed and irritated until it is in anything but a healthy condition. Corns and bunions are formed and walking becomes torture. Possibly you never thought of Dr. Chase's Ointment in this connection but it brings wonderful relief and comfort almost instantly. Its soothing, healing effects are magical.

CURED OF CONSTIPATION

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many diseases that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box. 9

DIVERSION OF TRAFFIC.

When the reciprocity agreement was first announced, among the objections hysterically urged was the plea that it would destroy the usefulness, and reduce the use of, our transportation systems in the west — would divert trade from east and west, to north and south lines. Though this absurd objection has been abandoned, there is a good deal of truth in it. Traffic by rail, east and west, will not be deverted to any extent, but the north and south traffic will, as it is now doing, greatly grow. There is a humming traffic in human beings now going north into Canada. Last year 150,000 of our United States cousins, skilled and well-to-do farmers, were carried by south and north traffic into the the Canadian west, taking with them cash and household effect to the value of about fifty million dollars, nearly half the amount of the national revenue for one year. This year as we are officially informed, even before the frost is out of the ground, 45 thousand United States farmers in the Western States have prepared to go north into Canada. The south and north traffic is so great, the amount of goods so great, that 200 freight tarins have been engaged to carry the stock and effects of our prosperous new citizens into the Canadian west. It does not seem a very great calamity for traffic to be congested with the goods of incoming citizens. Every settler in the west creates immediate demands upon every department of Ontario industry and commerce, and means profit. When we multiply the one settler by thousands, we multiply the profit to older Canada by millions. Yes, it is true, reciprocity will increase the movement of railway traffic south to north, and at the same time give new life and impetus to east and west traffic, so that with three continental lines in operation we shall have none too much traffic capacity for handling the rapidly growing trade the settling of the west will develop.

THINKING OF OTHERS.

There seems to be need of the organization of a T. O. O. club—Thinking of Others—among adults, like the splendid juvenile club of this name which did so much last Saturday for the Childrens Aid Society. Such a club is apparently needed among some of Peterborough's theatre-going people. Last night at the Opera House, by not thinking of others—by 200 or 300 coming in late — the first scene was almost entirely lost to the audience who were on time and comfortably seated. This was annoying, for the first act was the key to the situation, permitting a readier understanding and fuller enjoyment of the rest of the play. Not only was hearing interfered with, but persons intent on the play, had to rise and make way for the laggards. Of course there are sometimes legitimate reasons for being late —waiting for a car that doesnt' come, etc., but in the majority of cases, the delay and consequent wrong to others can be avoided. If the delay is due to a lady tarrying over-long at her toilette, her labour is vain, for she will not create much of a sensation, by making her entree in a darkened theatre, or add to her dignity by having to climb over the knees of early comers. The point is not altogether in the annoyance given to others, but in the lack of the principle of thoughtfulness and consideration for others, which affects not only theatre relations, but all the relations of life. Punctuality is a virtue which is very often more honoured in the breach than in the observance. We may convince ourselves—by very doubtful reasoning—that we have a right to waste our own time by failure to observe the time of an engagement, but we have no right to waste the time of others. Business is interfered with and friction created to an extent, not appreciated by the thoughtless, by failure to keep appointments. Among business men, time is money and a quarter or half hour wasted in waiting for some dilatory appointee, makes a break in a busy day that cannot be easily bridged. The habit that brings some persons always late at a theatre or concert, or even church, is one bound to extend to the other activities of life, and the loss inflicted by not always being on time at public entertainments, falls upon the guilty person and others affected; not to speak of the rudeness of interrupting a performance, or, a conversation or anything else. Good manners, the result of good breeding, have for their foundation, respect for the feelings and convenience of others. There is more need, if we regard the frequency of offence, to increase the numbers of the social Think-of-Others Club, than of increasing the membership of the Horticultural Society. The Golden Rule contains enough religious dogma, if lived up to, to carry the practiser of it through the world shedding light and cheer on every side and to land him or her on "Canaan's peaceful shore" at last.

SLAUGHTERING THE BIRDS.

Last spring and summer complaints were numerous from Rockliffe and other suburbs of the Capital respecting the slaughter of song birds in these localities by men and boys who prowled in the woods with shotguns and whose presence was almost as dangerous to residents as to the feathered denizens of the woodland. It is expected that some effort will be made this year to protect the birds if not the householders, in these districts, and it might be well to request that the county constables visit the outskirts of the Capital, particularly on Sundays, during the summer months, armed with authority to confiscate shotguns and other dangerous weapons in possession of those unable to show cause why such should be carried.

Aside altogether from the danger of the promiscuous shooting common on Sundays and holidays throughout the summer months in Ottawa's suburbs, the extermination of Canadian birds is a matter much to be regretted. Rockliffe, it has been claimed, possesses the most varied assortment of native birds of any place in Canada, some of the rarest varieties being found only in this district. Last year there appeared to be an organized attempt on the part of well-dressed young men to destroy the chief charm of some of the city's suburbs, and little or no official notice was taken of the fact that shooting expeditions were matters of almost daily occurrence. The condition is one that obtains all over the country, and only by the arrest and severe punishment of those found in possession of firearms in the city's outskirts is anything accomplished towards rendering these localities absolutely safe for residents and habitable by the feathered songsters.

The present is the time to stir up the authorities on the point; and the local Humane society should bring the matter to the attention of the county and township officials with a view of initiating prosecutions in such cases as may come to the attention of the inspectors or constables in the near future.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Toronto World, thinks a guess of a million population for Toronto in 1925 is too low an estimate. Yet the World claims that reciprocity will kill the live stock trade.

Verbal bulls are not all Irish. A newly-arrived Englishman yesterday asked a fellow countryman of longer residence the natural question—"What kind of a summer do you have in Canada anyway?" "I don't know—I've only been here eleven months."

Toronto, by special effort, has increased the membership of its Board of Trade to some 2,600 members, business and profession men, the most alert, enterprising and practical residents of the city The first work to which the augmented board will direct its efforts is the sanitary condition of Toronto. What are our Board of Trade and Board of Health doing in this respect?

The Hydro-Electric Commission is buying power to distribute among loyal Ontario municipalities, at Waddington, New York. If it undermines the loyalty of eight million Canadians and wears to a thread the Imperial tie, to have Canadian and United States farmers exchange turnips and cabbages, would you not think it would have a baneful effect to buy organized fighting from the Yankees?

A TEMPERANCE BUDGET.

(Brantford Expositor.)

One of the claims made by Mr. Lloyd-George for his budget was that it was a measure of temperance reform, and his contention has been abundantly vindicated. The increased taxes of the British budget naturally have been expected to show a very large increase for the country's liquor bill for the year 1910. It is, therefore, satisfactory to learn that the total does not amount to more than 4d per head of an increase for the year. The total expenditure on alcoholic liquors in 1909 was £155,162,465. The figures for last year are £157,-6046.58. An examination of the statement shows that there was an actual decrease of 1,800,681 gallons of spirits, although owing to the increased price of 5d a gallon, there was an expenditure increase of £441,684.

NORTHWARD HO!

(Montreal Herald)

News has reached the Immigration Department at Ottawa that all the avenues of access to the Canadian West are already crowded, which must mean that the inflow of population this year should be the most notable in the country's history. The ships sailing for Canadian ports, it seems, are provided with steerage passengers for six months to come. The overflow has begun, and New York and Boston are now to become ports of entry for settlers bound for Canada. That looks indeed as if the eyes of the home-hungry were turned to the Canadian West.

But it is not only from across the Atlantic they come. There is the sound of a going also in the States across the border. Our chief immigration officer, Mr. Scott, has word that 45,000 American farmers have their plans for moving so far advanced that two hundred freight trains have been engaged to carry the effects of some of them into Canada. Here is a phase of the new trend in transportation not covered by the addresses of those who declaim against it. The Canadian does not squirm when he hears of hundreds of freight trains carrying the stock and furniture of first-class farmers into that new country. To us in Montreal, for instance, it probably means that a good many more millions worth of business will be done annually in this nice old town.

A POPULAR WESTERN MINISTER.

(Ottawa Free Press)

The Biblical axiom that a prophet is not without honour save in his own country seems to have been negatived last night in Edmonton when the citizens turned out in their thousands to welcome home and to listen to their popular citizen and representative, Hon. Frank Oliver.

While, of course, it has been known that the sentiment in Alberta is running strongly in favour of reciprocity, as is perhaps natural in what is purely an agricultural community, the enemies of the Minister in that province—for like every successful man, Mr. Oliver has his enemies— have been endeavouring to create the impression that he had lost his influence, that last year's developments in the Provincial arena had weakened his power, and that local party dissensions had extended to the Federal party.

They got their answer last night. Frank Oliver remains now, as he has ever been, the favourite son of Alberta, its recognized leader and its responsible representative in the Government of the Dominion. And why should he not? His progressive policy in immigration, in settlement, in the administration of the lands, are proving to the people that he is the right man in the right place.

When he comes back to Ottawa he will have effectually answered his critics, and he will bring back with him the message that, no matter what the Opposition may say, the people of the West are a unit in support of the reciprocity agreement.

THE FAVOURED-NATION TREATIES.

(London Advertiser.)

The Dominion is bound by British treaties, which it had no hand in framing, to concede to Argentina, Austria Bolivia, Columbia, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Switzerland, and Venezuela, the tariff favours extended to the United States in the reciprocity agreement. Some of these treaties date back to the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Only two—those with Japan and Austria — have been made since Confederation. These were assented to by the Canadian Government, but it is obviously unfair that Canada should be bound by the others. The Laurier Government took this view of the German and Belgian treaties, which stood in the way of the British preferential tariff, and cut the Gordian knot by simply proclaiming the preference in defiance of the treaties. The British Government took the hint and terminated them.

It is reported that Sir Wilfrid Laurier will raise the question at the imperial conference by asking that Canada be released from the obligations of treaties which fetter her commercial independence. Sir Edward Grey, replying to a member of the House of Commons, said the other day that Canada could not free herself from the consequences of these treaties unless the Imperial Government ended them by denouncing them. No doubt the Imperial Government will, if Canada asks it, seek such a revision of the treaties as will give Canada a free hand without prejudicing the trade interests of Great Britain herself. Great Britain lost nothing by denouncing the German and Belgian treaties, and it is not at all likely that the other countries now embraced in the favoured nation conventions would seek to penalize so good a customer. These restrictions upon Canada are the inheritance of a time when Canada had an inferior status in the Empire and are not consistent with her power and position to-day. In the meantime no injury will be inflicted by the operation of the treaties. The countries named above are too remote to ship any appreciable quantity of farm products to Canada, but even if they did it would not follow that the Canadian farmers, who would have the United States market as a new string to their bow, would suffer from the process. It is the principle of the treaties that is objectionable, not their operation.

The Lost Mounted Police Patrol

(Ottawa Journal)

The death of the entire Fort McPherson patrol of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police in the barren, ice-bound wastes of the north is one of the darkest tragedies that has been recorded in the history of the force. Once each winter, for some years now, a small body of men, usually from four to six policemen cross the thousand miles of ice and snow between the Yukon Capital and Fort McPherson on a visit to one of the loneliest and most isolated outposts of the entire world. For years the trip has been made in safety, indeed, so fine is the physique of the men chosen for this difficult work that the occasional Yukon weather of fifty or sixty degrees below zero usually inconveniences them not at all. After four or five weeks' journey the Fort is reached, the mail and orders delivered, and, after a short rest and a renewal of supplies and equipment the men start back over the trackless waste of ice and snow to Dawson, usually arriving in magnificent physical condition.

This year in Yukon, as elsewhere, the winter was severe beyond all average, or expectation. The patrol failed to arrive in Dawson at the expected time, and very soon after keen anxiety was felt for the men's safety, it being realised that no weather, however severe, would long delay men of this stamp unless some unusual disaster had overtaken them. Search, however, was impossible, for the men followed no beaten track, but crossed the wild country by compass, hardly touching a single outpost of civilization on the entire journey. And it was only this week that the frozen bodies of the entire patrol were found, only one hundred miles from Dawson, and safety.

Dark as the tragedy is, the meagre reports already to hand indicate a fine soldier-like heroism on the part of one and all of these latest victims of the great white north. Whatever happened, whether the food failed, or was stolen by a sudden attack of a wolf pack rendered desperate by the starvation of the long winter, or whether the matches gave out, rendering the necessary fire impossible, whatever the cause of the tragedy, the mute remains show that the men continued their hopeless struggle day by day, hour by hour, step by step, helping one another, killing and eating the sleigh dogs one by one, hopeless starving, yet holding grimly on to life and duty. One by one they dropped when the last possible step to safety was made and died in the snow. The mute remaining records show that each man did his utmost in quiet heroism, and only when that utmost failed to achieve safety, only when the last possible effort was made in vain, did he fall in his tracks and perish.

The work in which these men gave their lives is as truly a work of empire as any sacrifice made in the heat of battle. Year by year, among the tribes of the north, Canada, through its mounted police, is advancing the outposts of civilization. These men who perished fell as truly for Britain as any party of men cut off in war, by the enemy, on the lines of communication. A few lines of a well-known poem dedicated to the men who perished in the winter of the Crimea campaign, fifty-seven years ago, seems well to fit the present circumstances:

One more gone for Britain's sake,
Where so many go;
Lying down without complaint,
Dying in the snow.
And ever on the dreary heights,
Down fell the snow.

Torontos Wore Batting Togs For Opening Game With Baltimore

BALTIMORE, MD., APRIL 20—Toronto leads the Eastern League. It may be for only a day, but the Canucks are happy while it lasts. The reason that Joe Kelley's aggregation leads is that it whipped Dunn's Orioles out of their boots in the first game of the season here to-day, by 17 runs to 5, and no other contests were played on the circuit because of bad weather.

Also it may be added that the Orioles are occupying the cellar hole for the same reasons. There may be a difference to-morrow, but to-day's contest showed that Kelley has a band of real ball players. They played rings around Dunn's much-touted Birds. They were masters in every department of the game. Willie Keeler and Tim Jordan, old Baltimore favourites, threw the most surprise into the Oriole fans by "coming back" both in the field and with the willow. The big first baseman distinguished himself by putting the ball over the right field fence.

All twirlers looked pretty much alike to the Toronto batsmen, and two were knocked out of the box, Dygert and Pope. Thompson finished the game. Kelley also tried two pitchers, deciding after an Oriole batting rally in the third to remove Mueller and substitute Killian. The latter held the Birds safely during the rest of the game.

The third, fourth, and fifth innings were disastrous for the Dunn flock. Toronto scoring fifteen runs. It fairly rained singles, doubles and triples, with one home run as a variation. These, coupled with errors, put the Birds to the bad, and caused the fans to root for the visitors. Only in the fourth inning did the Orioles have a look-in. Here a double and two homers netted three runs. Walsh and Schmidt both put the sphere over the fence.

The game was preceded by a parade, the officials and players of the opposing clubs riding in taxi-cabs, and led by a band. The band also played at the park. Mayor Mahool tossed out the first ball. President Barrow of the Eastern League was an interested spectator of the game.

The terrific hitting of the Toronto team was the day's feature. The Leafs never knew when to stop, and there was no telling when they would start. They were as apt to jump in with two out as not, and hammer the bulb all over the new Oriole Park and even out of it. Willie Keeler lived up to his reputation as the greatest batsman who ever lived. He hit at opportune times, and varied the denomination of his safeties as occasion demanded. He was there with the hunt, the single and the double. If the Orioles played in for him, he laced them over the fielders' heads. If they played back, Keeler dropped his hits short.

Tim Jordan's home run was a mighty wallop, one of the longest ever seen in this old baseball town. The rejuvenated first baseman played a gilt-edged game, and if he keeps up his performance of yesterday will make the first-suckers of the Eastern League look like a sick lot. Bradley, Vaughn and Mullen all played high-class baseball also. It is plain that the Toronto team will take a lot of beating this season. There is not a weak spot on the team unless it is in left field, and that defect can soon be remedied. Keeler, O'Hara, Jordan Kelley and other old Baltimore favorites were given a fine reception by the big crowd when the Torontos warmed up.

The day was anything but a good baseball day. The rain and slight snow of the preceding night had made the new field slow and heavy. Manager Dunn had the water soaked up from the infield with huge sponges. President McCaffery of Toronto, and a number of fans from that city were in attendance, and revelled in the terrific beating administered to the local team.

Raising the Ready-to-Wear Standard

When you buy a suit which bears the Sovereign Brand label, you secure certain advantages not possible to special order or custom clothes, no matter what the price.

Every part of a Sovereign Brand Suit is made by a specialist who devotes his entire time and study to making that particular part. There's no "trying-on stage—no bolstering up of defects to make up for deficient knowledge of the general-purpose tailor—not a cent paid until you get a satisfactory fit—and finally you pay less than you do for a custom or special measure suit. Not because Sovereign Brand Clothes are worth less but because the highly-developed Sanford organization has eliminated the wasteful economic system of the custom-tailor.

Think over these reasons for a moment, then go and see the Sanford dealer in your town. Ask to see his Spring and Summer range of Sovereign Brand Clothes. You'll find your size all ready waiting for you to try on.

BASEBALL IN LINDSAY SOME BACKING NEEDED

The Lindsay Warder says:

Several citizens in town are anxious to see a Midland League baseball team in Lindsay. It means a great deal for one man to take hold of the matter and keep it going as it will require considerable capital to get the team started here in town where the game has been "dead" for a few years. It will be necessary to purchase an entirely new outfit and a baseball outfit is not bought for a song.

In talking to Vic. Suggitt of Valentia yesterday afternoon he said he would like very much to get into the game in Lindsay. Hicks, another good ball player from the same burg would be willing to get into the game. With a few players of their calibre there might be a good team gathered together. The question is, "Where is the necessary capital?"

SCHEDULE OF INDOOR BASEBALL LEAGUE

It looks as if the Regiment was going to enter into baseball with the same enthusiasm as is characterizing the drill. Ten teams have signified their intention of entering into the spring league — one from each company, along with one from the Bugle Band and one from the officers.

The teams wil be put into two groups, A and B, each group to return a winner to compete in the finals. The games will commence on Friday, April 21, and will be continued on Monday, Friday and Saturday.

All the officers' games will be played on Saturday, at 9 o'clock.

The games on Monday and Friday will be played at 7.30 and 9, the first named at 7.30 and the second at 9.

Those competing are asked to be at the drill hall ready to play at the scheduled time as a little delay will take place each evening owing to the class in signaling.

The following are the groups:

A—No. 1 Company, No. 2 Company, No. 3 Company, No. 4 Company, No. 5 Company.

B—No. 6 Company, No. 7 Company, No. 8 Company, Bugle Band, Officers.

Bonehead Merkle Is Now Real Ball Player

Fred Merkle, the young gent who pulled a bloomer with the Giants three years ago, and lost the pennant for McGraw's team, has more than convinced the people of the baseball world that he doesn't wear a solid roof, despite the bad one slipped over with the Cubs. The latest one to come through with a healthy boost for Fred is Hugh Jennings, who says that he is one of the greatest ball players in the country.

Says Hughie: "Any man who can stand up after all the slamming that Merkle got and keep his nerve right with him all the time can play ball on any team any time he wants to. I think Merkle is just as good a first baseman as any now playing baseball, and I know he's one of the best all around players of the age.

"Merkle was hooted and hissed and called the 'biggest bone head in baseball,' when he made the mistake with the Giants, but believe me, he has taken it like a man and came back to show them all they were wrong when they said he was a boob. I'm strong for men of that type and wish there were more like him in the game."

All of which is about right, for there is no getting away from the fact that Merkle has come back and showed them all.

IF I WERE MAYOR

An Examiner subscriber has broken into spring poetry and has sent the Examiner the following verses, which are published without any endorsation as to their sentiments on the part of this paper. By request, the name of the guilty party has been omitted:

IF I WERE MAYOR!

If I were Mayor, what would I do?
I'd oil the streets and sidewalk too.
I'd spread so blame much oil around.
And make folks wish I was in pound.
When I had got them good and sore,
I'd sprinkle on a whole lot more.
Then the Times could print a second edition,
And the George street merchants get up a petition
To have the main streets paved.

Little drops of black oil,
Little chunks of sand,
Make a noise like an auto' exhaust
Going to beat the band.

If I were Mayor :Oh, what's the use
Of handing the Industrial Commissioner so much abuse?
Give him a chance, time will tell the tale,
Boost, don't knock, soft pedal the wail.
It's power we want, and when we get that
You will then be ready to doff your hat
To the man who is doing his level best.
Say ."please wont you give him a little rest?"

Factories come, and factories go,
Some cities get them, others are slow.
Peterborough, follow Adam Beck.
We will then have power, yes by Heck.
And the city will then begin to grow.
Then we'll be able to cackle and crow
When the leaves begin to fall.

If I were Mayor: Say, don't you think
That our City Buildings are on the blink?
I would build a new City Hall,
Foundation laid before the fall.
The new Library's a credit to the city
And it really it an awful pity
That our civic buildings are so dark.
When they should be located near Central Park.

If I were Mayor: Just one more plea.
Peterborough is good enough for me.
"Watch Peterborough grow." Lets get out of the bush
Adopt other slogans, give the city a push.
I'd build a new bridge near the Quaker Oats' dock
And run the street cars out to the great Lift Lock.
I'd improve the Parks, have a nice swimming pool
For the boys and girls who need a new school.
I'd put a bowling alley in the Fireman's Hall
And pay them more money to buy clothes in the fall.

I'd build a car line to Youngs' Point,
And another to Cobourg too;
For they're needed, badly needed —
And thats just what I'd do.

Never put off to Morrow
What you can do to-day,
While time is gently fleeting
Keep on making hay.

The City needs improving,
What matters if taxes are high,
It's money that makes the Mayor go
Ses I to meself. ses I.

First Break in Five Years.

Ottawa, April 19.—The death of Perry Graham, son of the Minister of Railways and Canals, makes the first break for some years in the ranks of the Parliamentary press gallery. At the funeral to-day the gallery was represented at Brockville by A. B. Hannay, president, with Messrs. P. E. Bixby, Toronto Telegram; H. R. Wilmot, Toronto World; James Muir, Ottawa Journal; R. M. McLeod, Ottawa Citizen, and Hal Rea, Montreal Gazette.

Why Boys Are Brave.

To his teacher's request that he give the class ideas on the subject of "bravery" little Johnny delivered himself of the following:

"Some boys is brave because they always plays with little boys, and some boys is brave because their legs is too short to run away, but most boys is brave because somebody's lookin'."

CLOSING OUT BY PUBLIC AUCTION

The China Hall on George street has started an auction sale, since last Saturday, to close out the entire stock of European and Japanese china, regardless of cost, to turn into cash. Also, they received a consignment of an immense quantity of Japanese high art goods, to be sacrified during a short period of time in this city. The store is crowded every afternoon and night, and things are going at very low prices. The prices are about one-quarter usually got in Toronto. The store is beautifully displayed with over 200 cases of real hand-painted china of all kinds of useful and ornamental articles, as well as antique and modern pieces, silk mandarin coats, kimonos, etc., are entirely new to our people as they are directly imported from Japan. All goods are thoroughly explained by Mr. Y. Otsuka, the Japanese auctioneer. The sale is started at 2.30 p.m. and 8 o'clock at night. The store is opened for public inspection during mornings. They expect to sell the entire stock quickly. This affords the grandest opportunity to our citizens to have genuine art china at bargain prices.

Short Life Predicted.

And every phase and aspect studied well.

To find he had no tale at all to tell.

Said Jones to Smith one day,
"Don't you miss your friends, old chap?
You go alone each day."

Just like a poisoned toad,
"Never do I miss my friends
If they get in the road!"

The Church And Pantheism

Mr. Editor,—It is possible that not many are aware that one of our city ministers is teaching Pantheism to his flock, but it is true.

This old Greek philosophy, that was believed in and taught two or three thousand years ago, is again brought out and clothed in modern garb, but using a crutch on account of old age, yet adjusted to the thought of the Higher Critic.

Let me give an instance. A Sunday school superintendent approached the minister a few days ago and asked him how he would deal with a person seeking salvation. "Oh," he replied, "I would point him to Nature, birds, butterflies, flowers etc. that is God and Nature one." Such an answer is enough to make the angels weep. This is Pantheism pure and simple. Now God is not Nature, neither is Nature God. Now where does the believer in this old philosophy stand? Simply midway between atheism and dogmatic Theism. The Bible is ignored, or would be altogether, if it were not for the living obtained by holding on to and preaching fragments of the word.

Everything is on the sliding scale to the one who gets away from the Old Book. They go from one ism to another, and later on can give no rational account of where they are; in fact they are lost.

An instance might be given to illustrate a certain bright young man, fresh from one of the colleges where Higher Critics played high jinks with the word of God, and who was ordained a minister of the Methodist (U.S.) church. Shortly after beginning to preach he changed his theology a little and began to preach Unitarianism; again he changed and became a Universalist preacher, and last of all, ended up preaching Antheism. The old saying is true—"from bad to worse."

It is a pity, but it is true, that three-fourths of Higher Criticism is of the destructive kind and not constructive or even instructive. To be considered wise and of a high mental calibre is much sought after and as one writer puts it: "The haste to be wise, like the haste to be rich, leads many to speculate in indifferent securities, and can only end in fallen fortunes." Jesus said in that wonderful prayer recorded in St. Luke's gospel, "I thank Thee, Father, that Thou hast hidden those things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes for so, Father, it seemed good in Thy sight." Also in Cor., 1-19-20: "For it is written I will destroy the wisdom of the wise and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise, where is the scribe, where is the disputer of this world." To whom does God reveal Himself? "To the man who is of a contrite and humble spirit and trembles at His word." For a moment let us consider what is the ground work or what foundation have the Higher Critics for their assumptions as regards the word of God. We find they have laid down certain pre-suppositions, or we might style them hypotheses (if that that is any better) which are the determining elements in this entire movement. It is their worldview, as a certain writer says, that is responsible for all their speculations and theories. And their hypotheses, if properly diagnosed, will give but a poor elucidation for the wonderful phenomenon of the world, let alone the wonderful dealing of the Creator with his creature, man.

That the theory of Evolution underlies and is the inspiration of Higher Criticism is an assumed fact. Anything savouring of the miraculous cannot be considered scientific, and hence must be discarded or branded myth, legend, et., and to accept the Bible statement of the beginning of things would be the ruin of their hypothesis, so their pre-suppositions must stand, even if the Bible goes to pieces. This is undoubtedly the position they have taken.

Is it possible that wisdom will die with them?

MUSIC AND DRAMA

GREEN STOCKINGS.

Peterborough people had their first glimpse of Miss Margaret Anglin, the celebrated Canadian actress last night and enjoyed the experience immensely, a very large audience being present to welcome Miss Anglin in her new comedy "Green Stockings," a cleverly planned and well-written play, full of bright lines and funny situations. It provided Miss Anglin with a role that fell outside her usual field, but she has no difficulty in proving her entire fitness as a comedian with the same facility as she has on many previous occasions in heavier roles, shown her ability. Her charming stage presence, her delightfully infectious laugh, and her clever reading of the lines, made her work a pleasure indeed, and the audience indicated its approval by the outbursts of applause that followed each curtain. She appears as Celia Faraday, the daughter of an English gentleman, who has grown tired of wearing the green stockings that an English custom has made compulsory for an elder sister at the marriage of her younger sister. She accordingly invents an imaginary fiancee, "Col. John Smith," of Somaliland, who she affectionately nick-names "Wabbles". She writes a letter to this imaginary hero, which unfortunately, or rather, fortunately, as it eventually transpires, is posted by a younger sister, and is delivered to a real flesh and blood Col. Smith, in Somaliland. Eight months after Celia grows tired of the romance, and has an obituary notice printed in the Times, announcing the death of Col. Smith. Just at this time the real Col. Smith arrives on the scene and, after a lot of quiet fun at the expense of Celia, to whom he represents himself as a friend of the "deceased" the situation is cleared up, and when the curtain drops for the last time there is a feeling that wedding bells are not far off, and that Celia will forsake the green stockings for good. Miss Anglin was supported by a most capable company, of which Mr. H. Reeves Smith had the principal male part.

TEACHER'S NERVES

Teachers often have the reputation of being cross when the trouble is with the nerves rather than the disposition. Mr. A. Sutherland, Principal South Bar School, Sydney, N.S., writes: "I was nervous and worried, had indigestion and headache and other ills. Doctors failed me. You can depend on me to recommend Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food for I believe it has my nerves are soon restored by this celebrated tirely cured me." Tired brains and feeble food cure.

PETERBOROUGH BOY SCOUT WILL BE HONOURED

Cecil Richardson Will be Presented With Medal at the Gathering in Massey Hall, Toronto, To-night---Three Ontario Scouts Will Have Acts of Bravery Publicly Recognized

For acts of conspicuous bravery three Boy Scouts will be rewarded at the Boy Scout display at Massey Hall this evening.

The rewards are to be presented by Mrs. J. M. Gibson, who will be accompanied by the Lieut.-Governor. The highest possible award, a bronze medal, is to be awarded to George Jackson of Dunnville. Two boys fell into the river near Dunnville and at the risk of his life, Jackson plunged in, and succeeded in taking one of them out. He went in again for the second, but after a hard struggle, was forced to release him, for he was so exhausted he could hardly reach the bank himself.

Charles Richardson of Peterborough carries off a silver medal. He plunged into a river one day last summer and rescued a lad who had fallen in. Richardson put a number of men to shame, by the prompt way in which he went to work.

A scroll of honour will be carried off by a Toronto boy, Thomas Hobbs, who assisted in the rescue of a drowning man from the Don river.

Without Scoutmaster's Aid.

The actual display is to be handled, as far as possible, by the Scouts alone, and there will hardly be a Scoutmaster behind the footlights. The programme will start with an exhibition of the three forms of signalling used by Scouts, the Morse, semaphore and flashlight, followed by a display of lassooing and single stick work.

Scouts will build bridges across the stage, aided only by their ordinary equipment. A pontoon bridge will be floated in about five minutes, and a double trestle and double lock bridges will be put up in almost as short a time. A rope bridge will also be swung. The uprights will be formed of the Scouts' staves, from which four ropes will be swung, two for the feet and two for the hands. When these are in position poles are thrust between them, and twisted until they are almost as taut as iron bars. The whole operation will take about seven minutes.

The bridge-building will be followed by tent-pitching, the Scouts pitching their tents and striking their quarters in record time.

The Look-Out Tower.

One of the features of the evening will be the raising of a look-out tower This is made out of the Scouts' poles and is no less than twenty-four feet high. When erected one Scout climbs on the top and is able to spy out a considerable range of country, where there are no trees, which, of course, is the only time when the look-out tower is necessary.

The programme will be interspersed with songs and choruses. It is computed that almost two hundred Scouts will take actual part in the exhibition, and these will be massed upon the stage in the closing scene.

OBITUARY

WILLIAM BLEZARD.

A highly respected and well known resident of Otonabee passed away yesterday in the person of William Blezard, at the advanced age of 78.

Deceased was born in Otonabee township in the year 1833 and has been a resident of that district ever since. He was a son of the late John Blezard, one of the first pioneers of Otonabee and was prominently engaged in agricultural pursuits.

In 1858 the late Mr. Blezard married Mary A. Moore, daughter of the late James Moore, formerly of Emily. Two children, one son and one daughter were born to bless this union.

The late Thomas Blezard, M.P., was a brother of the deceased, both of whom were well known by a wide circle of friends for their sterling integrity throughout the district in which they lived. The funeral will take place from the family residence, 3rd concession of Otonabee at 2 o'clock to-morrow and proceed to Westwood cemetery for interment.

RARE BIRD VISITORS ARE SEEN IN PETERBOROUGH

April 21, 1911.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—There are, among your readers, those who are fond of natural history. For their sakes, a few notes will be interesting:

We have had some rare birds with us all winter, viz., the "Great Grey Owl," "Richardson's Owl" and the "Evening Grosbeak." There have been the annual winter visitors, such as the "Pine, Grosbeak," "Lesser Red Poll," occasionally the "Hoary Red Poll," "Siskin," etc., but the three first mentioned are not annual visitors. For instance, my own observation marks the first visit of the "Evening Grosbeak," in the year 1889 and about twice since, till this year, they were very numerous throughout the country, in flocks of from twenty to forty. They fed largely upo nthe buds and seeds of the "Manitoba maple" and where they could find any seeds. They have not been seen for a few weeks, having returned to the Northwest to commence nesting, but this morning, April the twenty-first, (when many of our spring visitors are seen hurrying around, with building material in their beaks) I saw a male and female, not two males or three birds, but a pair. Most birds flock together through the winter, for protection, company, etc., but when the spring comes, all company is forgotten, except the company o fthe one. So the pair seen this morning is suggestive, and also prospective. We will hail the 'Evening Grosbeak' as a permanent resident of our own county, with delight. This is very probable, owing to the country in the Northwest being so rapidly populated by immigration, and thus crowding out their usual homes somewhat. We would also give another instance already established. We have had, for a number of years, a bird known as the "Cliff Swallow." They are very common now, at Kempt's brickyard, two or three miles east of Smith street bridge; the Cliff Swallows derived their names from the fact that they built their clay houses under the cliffs, but at Kempt's they use the eaves. These birds used to be confined to the North West, the same as the Evening Grosbeak, so we may expect in a few years to have the latter as a common resident.

Thanking you, for this space,

Yours truly,

E. ELCOME.

SUCCESSFUL BANQUET

One of the best and most successful banquets of the season was held last night in the Boys' Department rooms of the Y.M.C.A. The spread, which was put up by Colemans was most sumptuous and the boys did full justice to it.

The members of the winning team and their "new ones" were the guests while the losing team waited on the tables, in a most pleasing manner. Between 30 and 40 new members had been gathered in, which certainly speaks well for the now booming boys' department.

After the feast, Dr. Middleton, the chairman, mae a neat speech, in which he encouraged the boys in their work. Other speakers, Messrs. S. Hall, H. M. Gilchrist and F. Tate delivered excellent addresses to the interested and enthusiastic boys.

The speeches over, the boys spent the remainder of the evening in playing games, singing and springing yarns.

BANKERS' DANCE

The dance under the auspices of the Bankers of Peterborough will long be remembered as a most delightful social event, marked by the completeness of the arrangements and the degree of pleasure existing for the guests. There was a large attendance and the occasion was one of unmitigated enjoyment. Delightful music was provided by Fralick's orchestra from Toronto, while the catering arrangements were in charge of Mr. T. H. Cooper and were carried out in his usual excellent style. The committee are to be congratulated upon the great success that attended their efforts.

A SPLENDID UNDERTAKING

For the past few years the necessity of a chart of the navigation channel of the Trent Canal has been felt. Since the opening of the Lake Simcoe-Balsam Lake Section of the canal some few years ago, a great deal of through traffic between points on Lake Simcoe and Rice Lake has arisen. The increasing popularity of the Trent Canal as a tourist district and the popularity of the various lakes and rivers as summer resort centres has surprised even the most enthusiastic advocate of the canal as a commercial proposition, and it is now recognized as one of Canada' leading tourist routes, along with Muskoka, the Thousand Islands and the Rideau chain of lakes.

The increased summer population at the many popular resorts on Lake Simcoe, such as Orillia, Barrie, Bradford, Beaverton and Jackson's Point, has added greatly to the number of private launches. This is equally true in regard to the summer population on Sturgeon Lake Stony Lake, Rice Lake, and other stretches of navigation on the Trent Canal. In fact, the number of launches on the Trent Canal must now number several hundred. With the advet of the gasoline and small steam launch on the Trent Canal, and the throwing open of 100 miles of navigation from Orillia to Healey's Falls on the Trent River, has sprung up a desire on the part of many to make the through trip. No more pleasant outing can be undertaken than a trip through the various lakes and rivers that costitute the Trent Canal.

As above stated, however, it is no easy matter for the average amateur navigator to wheel his craft over the Trent Canal. There are many of the lakes through which the navigation channel is most confusing. A stranger from Lake Simcoe to the Kiawartha Section of the canal has heretofore been pretty much at sea as to what course he should take. The islands in many cases are confusing. A visitor from around Peterborough who would attempt to navigate Lake Simcoe would soon come to grief if he had not a chart to guide him. In fact, it is rather surprising that heretofore no effort has been made to fill this long-felt want. The owners of launches and steamboat men in general will this season find their long-felt want in this respect gratified. Arrangements are now under way to have published at an early date a complete book of charts and information generally in connection with the Trent Canal from Orillia to Healey's Falls. This book promises to be most interesting as well as very valuable to marine circles on the Canal. The charts fo some of the lakes are already complete, and a glance at them shows in an instant how valuable they will be to steamboat men and owners of small launches. The chart of Lake Simcoe is very reliable, showing as it does the channels to all the ports on the lake and the islands, shoals, bars, and other points of danger.

In addition to the charts of the lakes and rivers an interesting history of the canal is being published. As a mater of fact, the early history of the Trent Canal is well worth reading, dating back as it does to the year 1827 or thereabouts.

Some very spicy reading will be found in some newspaper editorials of years ago. A number of these have reference to the possibilities of the canal and the manner in which the scheme was kicked about, taken up and thrown down again, may surprise the present generation that now enjoy a trip from Lake Simcoe t ahould be popularly received along the route of the Trent Canal.

SOME INTERESTING LOCAL HISTORY

Canadian phamphlets, a publication of 1838-9, gives some very interesting information concerning the early history of the City of Peterborough. The early history of any municipality always proves of interest to the residents thereof and the Examiner has, therefore, pleasure in re-producing a brief account of how the Town of Peterborough looked to the historian in the year 1826. Canadian Pamphlets says:

Prior to the year 1818, that portion of the country lying north of Rice Lake, now comprised within the United Counties of Peterborough and Victoria ,was unknown to civilized settlement—the hunting ground of the aborigines of the country. In that year a number of English families, from the County of Cumberland, took advantage of the survey then being made of the township of Smith, and settled upon the communication road. What were the privations of those sturdy pioneers of settlement, who, amused to their new mode of life, had ventured thus far back to conquer the forest ,and carve out for themselves a competency amid the unsettled and uncivilezed regions of this country, may be easily imagined. Separated from intercourse with the world abroad by an almost impassable barrier of dense forest; deprived of the ordinary appliances of civilized life; without a mill to reduce their grain to flour; with nothing but their axe and a sturdy spirit of indomitable perseverance to depend upon; they settled in this new land, and trusting upon God and their own energies, determined to overcome the host of difficulties that stared them in the face. As a substitute for a mill, it is said that they had to cut a hole in the top of a large pine stump, as a mortar, and using for pestile a heavy piece of wood, attached to a lever similar to what may now be seen at farm wells, pounded the grain; while others were content with simply boiling the wheat with milk.

The First Mill.

About the year 1822, a Mr. Scott, a millwright, who had the year previous erected a mill at Cobourg, erected one, or an apology for one, on the site now occupied by Mr. Wallis. The building had a saw mill at one end, a couple of run of stones at the other, and below, a still where unrectified whiskey was manufactured and supplied to the few settlers who would drink it, and to the Indians. Miserable, however, as was this apology for a mill, it was still an important step onward; and although it is a record that one of the settlers in Smith had to carry his bag of wheat no less than sixteen times on his back to the mill before he could get it ground, yet it was a good change from the primitive idea of a pine pestle and mortar.

In the year 1825 a considerable accession to the population took place by what was familiarly known as the Robinson Emigration. As early as the year 1822, the attention of the British Parliament was seriously directed to the subject of Emigration to the Colonies. As a result of this, in 1823, a regular scheme of emigration was organised and entrusted to the Honourable Peter Robinson. The emigrants of that year settled in the Bathurst District; but the second emigration, that of 1825 principally from the south of Ireland, was settled in the Townships of Douro, Smith, Otonabee, Asphodel, Emilsmore, Manly and Ops. In the evidence given by Mr. Robinson before the Parliamentary committee of the House of Commons in May 1827 occurs a description of the route from Lake Ontario to the present Town of Peterborough, which, as indicating the then condition of the country, may be interesting to the reader. "On the 11th of August," said Mr. Robinson, " lembarked five hundred on board of a steam boat and landed them the next day at Cobourg on Lake Ontario, a distance of one hundred miles; the remainder of the settlers were brought up in the same manner, the boat making a trip each week. Our route from Cobourg to Smith, at the head of the Otonabee river, lay through a country as yet very thinly inhabited; the road leading from Lake Ontario to the Rice Lake (12 miles) hardly passable, and the Otonabee River in many places very rapid, and the water much lower than it had been known for many years. The first thing I did was to repair the road, so that loaded wagons might pass; and in this work I received every assistance from the magistrates of the district, who gave me fifty pounds from the district funds; and this sum, together with the labour of our people, enabled me to improve the road in ten days so much that our provisions and baggage could be sent across with ease, and three large boats were transported on wheels from Lake Ontario to the Rice Lake. The Otonabee River is navigable for twenty-five miles ,although in many places in it is very rapid ,and at this season there was not enough water to float a boat of the ordinary construction over some of the shoals. To remedy this difficulty.

Built a Boat.

I had a boat built of such dimensions as I thought might best answer to ascend the rapids, and had her completed in eight days. So much depended on the success of this experiment that I felt great anxiety until the trial was made; and I cannot express the happiness I felt at finding that nothing could more fully have answered our purposes, and this boat sixty feet in length and eight feet wide, carrying an immense burden, could be more easily worked up the stream, than one of half the size carrying comparatively nothing. Now that I had opened the way to the depot at the head of the river, there was no other difficulty to surmount than that which arose from the prevailing sickness, the fever and ague, which at this time was as common among the old settlers as ourselves. The first party I ascended the river with consisted of twenty men of the country, hired as axe men, and thirty of the healthiest of the settlers; none of these men escaped the ague and fever, and two died. The location of the emigrants, by far the most troublesome and laborious part of the service, was completed before the winter commenced, and I had a small log house built for each head of a family, on their respective lots, where they reside."

As already observed, this emigration was conducted under the auspices and at the expense of the British government. The expenses attending it amounted to £21 5. 4. sterling per head. Each head of a family was located upon one hundred acres of land. He had a small log house built for him, and was furnished with fifteen months' provisions. In addition to these he received one cow, one American axe, one sugar, one handsaw, one pick-axe, one spade, two gimlets, one hundred nails, one hammer, one iron wedge, three hoes, one kettle, one frying pan, one iron pot, five bushels seed potatoes, eight quarts Indian corn, and if they were poor, blankets in the proportion of one to each person, and one among three children. The number of persons actually located by Mr. Robinson in 1825 in this district, was 1,878; 621 men, 512 women and 745 children. The result of the first year's labour given by Mr. Robinson in his evidence before the Parliamentary committee was as follows:

The Result of First Year.

1386 1-2 acres of land cleared and fenced @ £4 per acre, £5548.

67799 bushels of potatoes @ 1 s., 3389 19s. 0.

25621 bushels of turnips @ 6 d., £640 11s. .6.

363 1-2 acres wheat, sown in the autumn of 1826, @ £2 per acre, £728.

40 oxen purchased by their labour @ 7 each, 280.

80 cows purchased by their labour @ £4 10s. each, £360.

166 hogs purchased by their labour @ 15s. £124. 10 .10.

It has been said of this emigration or more properly of the plan upon which it was conducted, that it proved abortive; that the emigrants contented themselves with living upon the produce given them by the government, trusting in Providence rather than in their own well directed labours, for the future. But the above statement of their first year's labours in the wilds of America, furnishes an effective refutation of this statement, and justifies to the fullest extent, the character for industry which their chief on every occasion gave them. Among the tabular statements will be found a detailed account of the emigration under the auspices of the Hon. Peter Robinson, to which, as being the first settlement upon a next-tensive scale in these counties, considerable interest naturally attaches.

W.C.T.U. ITEMS OF INTEREST

The regular monthly meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held on Friday afternoon of next week in the Public Library building.

Immorality Among the Young.

Mrs. Thornley's indictment against the schools of London has called forth numerous letters from Ontario teachers, which show that the statements made about the schools of London could be made of children in any city the size of London, and in many much smaller places. The existence and growth of the evil is frankly admitted by all who have studied it. The question is: what is the remedy? One, a principal of a school, in a letter to the Globe, says: "As the root of the social evil is embedded in ignorance, it must be destroyed by proper instruction. This is the view held by the W.C.T.U. and in accordance with which they have, for years, employed Mr. Beal to lecture to the boys of our schools. Some time ago the Peterborough Union, being convinced of the need of similar instruction for the girls, petitioned the Board of Education to appoint an instructor in anatomy, hygiene and morality for the girls. While admitting the wisdom of the appointment of an instructor, and the need of knowledge upon these subjects, still no action was taken by the board. Long ago the wise man who wrote. "Where no wise guidance is the people falleth," and also "He shall die for lack of instruction; and in the greatness of his folly shall he go astray." A life of knowledge is not often a life of injury and crime. While 450,000 youths are every year added to the victims of the social evil, in the United States; and 60,000 girls in Canada and the United States sacrificed to the white slave traffic, it is time that parents,, teachers, boards of education, and all who are interested in the young, wakened up to the need of action.

Unfit Literature and the Schools

The harvest of to-day is from the sowing of yesterday. What that sowing is which produces the crop of immoral tendencies in the schools of Canada was set forth by Principal Wallis in the Globe of Saturday with commendable clearness, moderation, and power. No one whose eyes are open to the facts and whose intelligence grasps the significance of those facts will take away from or minimize the dark catalogue of evils which combine to produce the serious problem of juvenile immorality of which Mrs Thornley drew such emphatic attention. Indeed one colossal evil most ruinous in its influence was omitted from Principal Wallis' list. Nothing could be more utterly damning to the youthful mind than the immoral literature, the vile booklets, and polluting picture cards with which this country has been flooded in recent years.

These words are used with the most serious deliberation. The country has been "flooded". The literature is "vile" and "polluting". The influence can be nothing less than "damning". And that, too, not for youths in their teens. Some of the pamphlets and postcards confiscated by the Crown officers in Toronto during the past two years were so unthinkably obscene that lawyers long experienced in the prosecution of crime and newspaper men hardened to the sight of the seamy side of life could scarcely believe any human being in Canada could traffic in material so vile. And yet so damaging was the impression even on seasoned minds that anyone not a degenerate would wish he had never seen the samples exhibited in court.

But this unclean literature went far beyond the court. Of one set of ten cards the police in one case secured copies for 50,000 copies that had already been delivered to retail agents in Toronto and other cities and towns in Ontario. Shipments of from 2,000 to 5,000 each had been made to Barrie, to Peterborough, to Oshawa, to Brantford, and other points. Agencies for their distribution were established in poolrooms, barrooms, cigar stands, and orders were filled for news stands and picture card stores. Those 50,000 poisonous cards are still in circulation.

And that was only one case. The electroplates for nearly a hundred other cards and for two booklets of the most defiling sort were also confiscated. From each of those plates a half million copies might have been printed. A consignment of 87,000 was destroyed by the police authorities. Another lot of 200,000 was secured in a private house on a side street. In Montreal between 200,000 and 300,000 equally unfit cards and photographs were destroyed. On a Montreal-Toronto train a man arrested on another charge was found selling similar cards to such passengers as seemed susceptible. A similar trade was carried on by a news agent running east from Woodstock.

Nor is the circulation of such literature confined to those already degenerate. It permeates the factories and resorts of youth. It finds its way into the schools. One booklet of inexpressibly hurtful character passed through the hands of nine girls in their early teens belonging to good families before it reached the Crown officer. Its trail may never be eradicated.

In face of such fa[illegible]—and these are only samples—where is the sense in blindly denying the allegations made by experienced and responsible friends of the schools and of good citizenship? Educational authorities in every community, trustees and teachers and parents, would do well to be on the alert and to be seriously suspicious lest the incurable evil be wrought unawares to them under their very eyes. The Ontario Educational Association should not blink its eyes at this menace. If it is disregarded it will in one form or another destroy the finest ideals and blight the most hopeful life. Teachers everywhere should join in a campaign against this evil in every form.—Globe.

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic Is All You Need

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That's the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neurslgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order; that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Don't dose yourself with purgatives as so many people do in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in the spring is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine helps to make new blood, which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite, and makes tired, depressed men, women and children bright, active and strong. Mr. B. Martin, Deux Rivieres, Que., says: "About a year ago I was all run down. I was pale, weak, and had but little appetite. I also suffered from a severe pain in the back, and though I tried several medicines nothing helped me until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and these soon fully restored my health. I can strongly recommend these pills to every weak person."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHY SLEEP IS NECESSARY

During sleep Nature restores the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life Without sleep physical bankruptcy is quick and certain. Mrs. J. Derocher, on Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., writes: "I can say for a certainty that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine, for besides steadying the nerves, it built up my sleep wonderfully and enabled me to sleep and eat well."

One Reason for Our Success We Emphasize Accuracy

Every pair of Eye-glasses that goes through our prescription department is subjected to the most careful examination of even the smallest details. Every lens is neutralized, measured and centred by two Inspectors. Every Eye-glass or Mountings supplied at the Peterborough Optical Institute is adjusted to the exact position before each eye and so fit pleasingly the features of the wearer. No matter how accurately the lenses may be ground and centred, if the pupillary width of the frame does not correspond with that of the eyes, there will be strain upon the motor muscles of the eyes, and consequently discomfort. We are most particular to adjust glasses to every detail in order to give greatest relief to the eyes and most perfect conformity to the features. This is one reason for our success.

ALFALFA FATTENS COLTS

From Farm and Dairy.

Last week one of the editors of Farm and Dairy while on the train met Mr. A. M. Woods, of Durham Co., Ont., who told of his brother, B. G. Wods, of Victoria Co., who has been growing alfalfa for years. Mr. Woods buys calves and colts and keeps them over winter on alfalfa hay, without grain of any kind. He works his horses on alfalfa hay, with almost no grain at all, and his stock, we learn, always have nice sleek coats. Mr. Woods also carries his breeding sows over winter without grain, they being fed on alfalfa hay.

Mr. A. M. Woods, about March last year, bought a colt from his brother. This animal had received no grain, and was fat. Its new owner fed it chop and hay, but could not keep it up in condition, and the colt went out on grass thinner than when it was bought from its first owner, who fed it alfalfa hay alone.

THE CARE OF MILK

From Farm and Dairy.

Geo. H. Barr, Chief Dairy Division, Ottawa, Ont.

We can make more cheese and better cheese if we take proper care of milk. Why don't we do it? It is little trouble if gone about in the right way. Just cool the milk down quickly and cover it immediately. Dipping is not necessary. There is no gas in milk that is just drawn from a healthy cow. When milk is dipped and poured through the air, it takes in millions of bacteria, which multiply rapidly and develop bad flavors. Stirring the milk in cold water cools it more readily and reduces the chances of the bacteria in the milk to multiply.

To get the very best milk put the empty can in the water tank and add each cow's milk directly as it is drawn. When through milking, put on the cover and leave it. Never mix the morning's and night's milk if it is possible to avoid it. The evening milk should be cooled to 60 degrees, while the morning's milk can be delivered without cooling. I generally found in my factory work that the milk that travelled farthest arrived in the best condition. This was because it was properly cooled.

We Go To SPECIALISTS

When we wish to have our teeth treated, do we call on the family physician or a nerve specialist? Not at all, we consult a man in the dental profession who has, by specialization on the organs of digestion and mastication, the proper scientific knowledge and skill to alleviate the sufferings produced by these particular organs. On the other hand, if our nerves are all unstrung and we are bordering on the verge of a nervous collapse, we give little thought to the dental surgeon and consult a specialist on neurosis. We should be just as careful who we have treat our Eyesight. The eyes are one of the most important organs of the body, and should be treated only by a Specialist.

We are Specialists in the correcting of all errors of refraction in the Eye. We do all our own Lens Grinding, thus assuring promptness and positive accuracy.

"THE BLACK CROSS"

By OLIVE H. BRIGGS

The Violinist flung himself back in the corner of the garota, huddling himself in the furs; the windows were shut and his breath made a steam against the panes. The carriage was black as a cave.

"There ought to be another fur!" he said angrily to himself. His teeth were chattering and his whole body shivered against the cushions. "I told Bobo to put in an extra fur. The devil now, where can it be?"

He groped with his hands, feeling the seat beside him, when all of a sudden he gave an exclamation, alarmed, half suppressed, his eyes staring into the darkness, trying vainly to penetrate.

What was it? Something was there, moving, breathing, alive, on the seat close beside him. Gracious heaven! He wasn't alone! Velasco crouched back instinctively, putting out both hands as if to ward off a blow. He listened, peering. Surely something breathed—there, in the corner! He could make out a shadow, an outline.—No, nothing—it was nothing at all.

His pulses beat rapidly; he groped again with his hands, slowly, fearfully, hesitating, and then groping again. It was as though something someone were trying to elude him in the darkness. His breath came fast; he listened again.

Something cowered and breathed—"Bonhe moi!" He gripped his lip with his teeth and hurled himself forward, grappling into the furthermost recesses of the kareta. His hands grasped a cloak, a human shoulder, a body. It dragged away from him. He clutched it and something shrank back into the shadows. His eyes were blind; he could see nothing, he could hear nothing; he could only feel. It was breathing. His hand moved cautiously over the cloak, the shoulder. It resisted him, trying vainly toescape; and then, as the carriage dashed on through the darkness, he dragged the thing forward, nearer—nearer, struggling. The breath was on his cheeks. He felt it distinctly—the rustle of something alive.

Velasco clenched his teeth together, clutching the thing, and held it under the window-pane, close, close, straining forward. As he did so the rays of a street lamp fell through the glass, a faint, pale light through the steam on the panes; a flash and it was over. Velasco gave a cry.

Beside him was a woman, slight, and veiled, and she was crouching away from him, holding her hands before her face, panting, frightened, even as he was.

"Who are you?" cried Velasco' "What are you? Speak, for the love of heaven! I feel as if I were going mad—Speak!"

He shook the cloak in his trembling grasp, and, as he did so, a hand pressed into his own. He grasped it. The fingers clung to him, alive and warm. Velasco hesitated. Then he dropped the hand and from his pocket he snatched a match, striking it against the side of the carriage. It sputtered and went out. He struck another. It flickered for a moment and he held it between his hands, coaxing it. It burned and he held it out, gazing into the corner, coming nearer and nearer. The eyes gleamed at him from behind the veil; nearer—He could see the ova: of the face, the lips. Then the match went out.

"Kaya—Kaya!"

He snatched at her hand again in the darkness and held it under the fur. "You came after all," he whispered hoarsely. "I thought I had dreamed it. Speak to me; let me hear your voice."

He felt her bending towards him; her shoulder touched his. "You promised—I hold you to your promise."

"Yes; yes!"

"Have you changed your mind?"

"No—Don't take your hand away. No! It is horrible, the storm and the blackness. Hear the wind shriek! The hoofs of the horses are padded with snow; they are galloping. How the carriage lurches and sways! Are you afraid, Kaya? Don't—don't take your hand away."

Velasco's voice was husky and forced like a string out of tune. It was strange, extraordinary to be sitting there in that dark, black cave, his hand clasping the hand of a woman, a stranger. The two sat silent. The horses plunged forward.

Suddenly they stopped. Velasco started as out of a dream and sprang to the window, wiping the steam from the panes with his sleeve.

"Bobo!" he cried, "Madman! This is not the Station. Where are you going, idiot—fool!"

His voice was smothered suddenly by a hand across his lips.

"Hush, Monsieur, have you forgotten? The driver knows, he is one of us. Come with me; and I pray you, I beseech you, don't speak, don't make a sound; step softly and follow."

In a moment the girl was out of the carriage and Velasco behind. Her veil fluttered back; her cloak brushed his shoulder. The storm and the wind beat against them. He ran blindly forward, battling with the gale; but fast as he went she went faster. He could scarcely keep up. In the distance behind them, the carriage and horses were lost in a white mist, a whirl.

"Here," she cried, "Bow your head quick, the arch—and then through the gate—run! Take my hand in the court—let me lead you. I know every step. Run—run! You waited so long; we shall be late. There is barely time before the train. Ah, run, Monsieur—run!"

The two figures dashed through the alley and into an open cloister, running with their heads bowed against the wind, struggling with the snow in their eyes, in their throats; blinded, panting.

"Stop!" gasped Velasco, "I can't run like this. Stop! You mad thing, you witch! Where, where are you going? Stop, I tell you!"

She dragged at his hand. "Come—a moment further. Come, Monsieur. Ah, it is death—don't falter. Run!"

She caught at a little door under the wall and pushed it madly. It yielded. He sprang in behind her; and then he stood blinking, amazed.

They were alone in the dark, ghostly nave of a huge Church. The long rows of columns stretched out in the distance, tall and stately like pines in a forest; the aisles were broad and shadowy, leading far off in a distant perspective to the outline of an altar and a high cross suspended. They were dim, barely visible.

"Where are we?" he murmured, faltering. "Kaya, speak—tell me."

She put up her face close to his and he saw that her lips were quivering, her eyes blurred with tears. Her veil was white with the snow, like a bird's. She dragged at his hand, and he followed her dumbly, their footsteps echoing, a soft patter across the marble of the church.

It was absolutely dark; only on the far distant altar three candles were lighted, three sparks, red and restless, like fireflies gleaming. Otherwise the nave, the chancel, the transepts were as one vast blackness stretching before them. They fled on in silence; their goal was the candles.

At first the space before the altar seemed empty, deserted, like the rest of the Church; but as they approached, nearer and nearer, three forms seemed to melt from the back of the choir and stood on the steps; two were figures in cloaks; the third was a priest. His surplice shone in the shadows against the outline of the columns. He mounted the steps of the altar and stood with his face to the cross. They seemed to be waiting.

To Velasco the sound of his footsteps echoed and reverberated on the marble, filling the darkness. The noise of them was terrible. He would have covered his ears with his hands, but the girl urged him forward. The soft fingers crept about his own like a vine, clinging, irresistible.

"Come," she breathed, "ah, come, Monsieur—come!"

Then he followed, moving forward hurriedly, blindly, like one hypnotized. His senses were dulled; his will was inert. When he came to himself he was kneelnig beside her on the marble, and he heard the voice of the priest, chanting slowly in Slavonic:

"Blessed is our God always, and ever, and unto ages of ages.

"In peace let us pray to the Lord for the servant of God, Velasco, and for the hand-maid of God, Kaya, who now plight each other their troth and for their salvation. . . . That he will send down upon them perfect and peaceful love. . . . That he will preserve them in oneness of mind and in steadfastness of faith. . . . That He will bless them with a blameless life. . . . That he will deliver us from all tribulation, wrath, peril and necessity. . . . Lord have mercy!

Lord have mercy!"

He listened in bewilderment; was it himself, or his ghost, his shadow. He tried to think, but everything melted before him in a mist. The girl by his side was a wraith; they were dead, and this was some strange unaccountable happening in another world. The marble felt cold to his knees. Velasco tried to move, to rise, but the hand of the priest held him down. The voice chanted on:

"Hast thou, Velasco, a good, free and unconstrained will and a firm intention to take unto thyself to wife this woman, Kaya, whom thou seest here before thee?"

And in the pause he heard himself answering, strangely, dreamily, in a voice that was not his own:

"I have, reverend Father."

"Thou has not promised thyself to any other bride?"

"I have not promised myself, reverend Father."

Then he felt the hand of the priest, pressing the crown low on his forehead; it weighted on his brow, and when he tried to shake it off he could not.

"The servant of God, Velasco, is crowned unto the hand-maid of God, Kaya. In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen."

"The servant of God, Kaya, is crowned unto the servant of God, Velasco. In the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Amen."

"O Lord our God, crown them with glory and honour!"

"O Lord our God, crown them with glory and honour!"

"O Lord our God, crown them with glory and honour!"

Velasco passed his hand over his face; he was breathing heavily. The crown glittered in the darkness.

"And so may the Father and the Son, and the Holy Spirit, the all-holy, consubstantial and life-giving Trinity, one God-head, and one Kingdom, bless you, and grant you length of days, . . . prosperity of life and faith: and fill you with all abundance of earthly good things, and make you worthy to obtain the blessings of the promise: through the prayers of the holy Birthgiver of God, and of all the saints. Amen."

"Glory to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Spirit now, and ever, and unto ages and ages."

"Amen."

The chanting ceased suddenly, and there was silence. Then he felt some thing falling against him, and he staggered to his feet, dragging the girl up with him. She trembled and shook, pushing him back with her hands; her eyes were full of terror, staring up into his, the eyes of her husband. Again everything grew misty and swayed.

He was signing a paper; how his fingers quivered; he could scarcely hold the pen! The priest drew nearer, and the two cloaked figures. They all signed; and then he felt the paper crackling in the breast of his coat, where he had thrust it. They were hurrying back through the dark, ghostly nave.

They were running, and the sound of their footsteps seemed louder and noisier than before; they ran side by side, through the door in the wall, the cloisters, the arch, bowing their heads; and there was the carriage, a great blot of whiteness, the horses like spectres. The snow came whirling through the air in sharp, icy flakes, cutting the skin. The wind grew fiercer, more violent.

With a last desperate effort Velasco dashed forward, pursuing the veil, the fluttering cloak—and the door of the carriage closed behind them. In that moment, as it closed, the horses leaped together, as twin bullets from the mouth of a cannon; galloping, lashed and terrified through the night It was still inside the kareta.

Suddenly Velasco was conscious of a voice at his elbow, whispering to him out of the silence: "Thank you, Monsieur, ah, I thank you! We shall be at the station directly; then a few hours more and it will be—over! You will never see — me — again! I thank you—I thank you with all my heart."

The voice was soft and low, like a violin when the mute is on the strings. He could scarcely hear it for the lurching of the carriage. The horses gave a final plunge forward, and then fell back suddenly, reined in by an iron hand, and the kareta came to a standstill.

The station was all light and confusion; porters were rushing about, truckmen and officials, workmen carrying coloured lanterns. "Not a second to spare!" cried Velasco, "Send the trunks after me, Bobo—Here—my valise!"

He snatched up his violin-case, and the slim, dark-veiled figure darted beside him. "If we miss it!" he heard her crying in his ear, "I shall never forgive myself!"

WOMEN MAY AVOID OPERATIONS

By taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will prove how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before.

Here is her own statement.

Paw Paw, Mich.—"Two years ago I suffered very severely with a displacement. I could not be on my feet for a long time. My physician treated me for seven months without much relief and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weeks and came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. Today I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise my friends who are afflicted with any female complaint to try it."—Mrs. ORVILLE ROCK, R. R. No. 5, Paw Paw Michigan.

If you are ill do not drag along until an operation is necessary, but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for women's ills, and has positively restored the health of thousands of women. Why don't you try it?

CHEESE MAKER TALKS RECIPROCITY

From Farm and Dairy.

"When it comes to reciprocity with the United States," said Mr. J. J. Hogan, a Peterboro Co., Ont., cheesemaker, to an editor of Farm and Dairy recently, "I am right in for it with both feet. We Canadians have been selling at low prices in Great Britain in competition with the whole world—cheese that is much superior in quality to anything that is marketed in the United States, where cheese is sold at prices running three, four, and five cents higher.

"On quality alone, our cheese can enter into competition with that of the United States without fear of the result. You do not catch a United States cheesemaker staying in his factory until late at night in order to get out a good cheese. No, sir! Their work must be done up in good time. I know of many makers on the other side who plan to have all the cheese in the press by two or three o'clock in the afternoon. This, of course, means a poor quality of cheese. Cheese prices in Canada have been altogether too low this last year or two, and free entry into the United States markets would increase prices and give the cheese industry a new impetus.

"I have an additional reason for desiring reciprocity," continued Mr. Hogan. "I buy the whey at my factory and feed pigs. Some years I have as many as 200 or 300 pigs to market, and I know just what free entry for live hogs would mean for this end of my business. I have followed United States and Canadian hog markets for some years, and I know that the average price on the other side runs from 60 cents to $1 higher. The American beef trusts, packers' unions, etc., may be a great evil, but when it comes to keeping down hog prices, our Canadian packers can show them a thing or two. If reciprocity goes through it will be a big benefit all round."

SELECT SEED CAREFULLY

From Farm and Dairy.

Geo. H. Clark, Seed Commissioner, Ottawa

The available supply of seed corn is better than last year, though not as good as most farmers desire. Little difficulty will be experienced with the flint varieties; but even of these farmers should procure their supply of seed, if possible on the ear, and carefully examine and discard any ears containing kernels with discolored embryo. Even greater care should be taken with dent corns. Injury to seed corn is usually from heavy frosts occurring during the early winter months, before the corn has become thoroughly dried. When the corn is allowed to stand in the shock until late in the autumn, some of the ears become quite moist from autumn rains and may be injured at any time thereafter by 10 degrees of frost or less.

Seed merchants as a rule prefer to handle their seed corn shelled, because in the ear it is bulky and all defects, even in first class corn, are clearly evident in the unshelled seed. Most farmers who grow corn for ensilage, but who are not corn experts, are unable to detect poor quality or find fault with seed corn that has been shelled and cleaned from the nubbins in the corn crib, after the best ears have been selected for sale on the ear.

QUERIES RE ALFALFA FOR SEED

From Farm and Dairy.

I have five acres of alfalfa from which I cut two crops and secured 12 loads of alfalfa hay last year. I would like to know what crops to save for seed and how to handle it and if it would do for hay the next year, or will it weaken the roots to take a crop for seed.—J.D.C., Elgin Co., Ont.

The second crop is ordinarily the crop that in Ontario is saved for seed. Some farmers are beginning to consider that they should save seed from the first cutting. This matter will be fully dealt with in due time by Mr. Marsh in his special series of articles now running in Farm and Dairy.

What Do You Think of This?

How often we hear men say, "Yes, I'd insure my life if I was only sure I could keep it up. I could pay it alright as long as I had my health, but if sickness or accident laid me low I would have to give it up and lose the protection just at the time I needed it most." Now, the issues a policy just to suit such a case. Under this policy, should the assured become totally and permanently disabled from any cause, the policy is kept in force during such disability, without any lien or charge against it. Or, in lieu of this, the Company will commence forthwith to pay to the assured one twentieth of the policy each year for twenty years. Should the assured die before the twenty annual payments have been paid, the remaining instalments will be paid to such beneficiary as the assured may designate.

Is not this the Climax of Liberality? The Sun Life live up to its motto of "Prosperous and Progressive." Investigate this proposition before insuring.

Father Morrisey's "No. 11" Cures Stomach Troubles.

When your stomach is working right you never know it is there. But when it feels as heavy as lead—when you have Heartburn, Belching of Wind, Sourness, a gnawing hunger, with distress after eating—when you feel irritable and depressed — then you may know that the digestive fluids in the stomach are not sufficient to digest what you eat.

Father Morrisey's "No. 11" Tablets supply these fluids in concentrated form. Each tablet, dissolved in the stomach, will digest 1¼ pounds of food, which is more than an average meal.

Read what Father Morrisey's treatment did for Mr. Gosline, of Salmon Lake. He writes Nov. 30, 1908:

"I was troubled with indigestion, so severe that I really thought I had cancer of the stomach. I took much doctors' remedies, till I was forced to seek another resource, and this was the Rev. Father Morrisey. His treatments worked miracles, until I have been entirely cured, so that now I do not look to the quality of the diet but to the quantity."

POULTRY KEEPING IN RELATION TO ORCHARDING

From Farm and Dairy.

Manning K. Ellis, King's Co., N.S.

In an orchard conditions seem ideal for poultry; and by poultry in this article I mean hens, for they are the only branch of the poultry tribe with which I have had experience. I have two hen-houses, 46 by 15 feet floor space, in each of which I keep 150 to 200 hens. These houses are in a 15 acre orchard, about 20 rods apart. The hens have free range, no yards of any kind the whole year round. They are fed by the "hopper" system with a dry mash, made of bran, middlings, ground oats and corn meal equal parts, and about a half part of high grade beef scraps; cracked corn, oats and buckwheat are fed in the winter, scattered in a straw litter on the floor. Four quarts of corn in the morning, and the same quantity of oats or buckwheat at noon to each 100 hens, is the ration allowed. About four large turnips to each 100 hens are given each day, cut in two and stuck on a nail just high enough for more feed, this ration is gradually before them all the time.

In the spring as the hens roam farther afield, and the range supplies more feed, this ration is gradually cut down. First one feed of hard grain is taken away. Later in the summer only the dry mash is given, and in September, when the buckwheat is getting ripe in the orchard cover crop, no extra feed is given, and until about November 1st, they pick up their own living.

I have found this system of feeding does not suit old hens, and the last two years have killed the laying stock each summer, going into the houses in the fall with a new lot of pullets. If the ration is properly balanced, I do not think you can get a pullet to eat too much, and when one is hurt by over-feeding 99 are stunted by not getting enough.

PLAN OF HOUSES

The south side of each house is about equal parts glass and cotton, and except in the coldest weather, the cotton windows are out or partly out all the time. The great difficulty is to keep the house dry, but with a straw loft, cotton windows, and changing the litter every 10 days to two weeks there need be no trouble on this account. The droppings are collected each week and spread in the orchard some distance from the house, as the trees near the house receive all the fertiliser they need. The land should be ploughed spring and fall. Besides the regular cultivation of the orchard, that the manure may be absorbed, for in keeping a large number of hens in one flock the land will become contaminated and poisonous to the fowls if you are not particular in this respect.

Fifty hens will furnish all the fertiliser an acre of orchard requires. So if the poultry will pay for the feed, one problem in orcharding is solved, and artificial manures can be left to the other fellow. To show that the fowls will pay for their feed, here follows my last year's showing:

Cash for eggs, from Nov. 1st, 1909, to Nov. 1st, 1910....		$246 70
Cash for fowls sold		173 03
Cash for chickens sold		85 00
Pullets on hand		100 00
Poultry and eggs used in the house		50 00
		$654 73
Cash paid for feed ..	$260 00
Poultry on hand, Nov. 1st, 1909	130 00
		390 00
Net profit		$264 73

INDIRECT RETURNS

No credit is given for the manure, which may be fairly put against the care. Now, as to the indirect profits. Two and a half acres of orchard near one house is now out 21 years; 100 trees in the orchard. This has had no fertiliser, except from the hen house, for five years. In 1907 the apples sold for $350, in 1908 for $600, in 1909 $908, and this year (1910) there was a scattering crop. These trees are in as vigorous and healthy a condition as any orchardist could ask for, and give promise of abundant returns in the future. Buckwheat has been sown every year in July as a cover crop, the hens getting their living from it the latter part of the summer. Quite a large quantity of straw has been used in this house as scratching litter, and this has greatly added to the amount of humus in the orchard.

Strange ideas are held by those that have had no experience of the amount of work required to care for a flock of poultry, but handled under the conditions I have written of here, 200 hens can be cared for with half as much labor as four cows, and the returns will be greater.—N. S. Annual Report.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

From Farm and Dairy.

The annual meeting of the Canadian National Record Board will be held at the Prince George Hotel, Toronto, on Tuesday, April 25th, at 10.30 a.m.

Thirty acres of land have been leased in Essex County for $900 for one season. This is probably the record rental for land for farm purposes in Canada. The land will be put into tobacco, and even at this high figure with a good season should well repay the lessees. Lately leases running up to $20 and $25 an acre for land in Essex have been quite common.

An application has been made by the Ottawa Dairy Company and a number of other dairy companies, including companies in Montreal, asking that the Railway Commission order railways to handle cream in baggage cars. Milk is now handled as baggage by railways, but cream is considered as express. The milkmen want cream placed on the same footing as milk, which will effect a material reduction in rates of transportation. This important application is to be heard by the Railway Commission at its traffic sitting on the 18th of April.

Red Fife spring wheat, the variety that has made Manitoba and Saskatchewan famous the world over as producers of No. 1 hard wheat, can be grown satisfactorily in New Ontario. Farm and Dairy has received a sample of Red Fife wheat grown near Englehart by Mr. Wm. Schell. This wheat was sown on the 5th of April and was harvested on the 8th of August. Mr. Schell, who formerly resided near Woodstock, Ont., is very enthusiastic over the wheat growing possibilities of the new country in which he now resides.

HOW THE ALFALFA CROP PAYS

From Farm and Dairy.

Editor, Farm and Dairy,—My father, John G. Weese, has raised alfalfa for three years. He takes his second crop for seed. Last year he had one good load for seed and from this he threshed six bushels. He sold four bushels of the seed and it brought him $48 cash.

We find alfalfa hay a success for feeding. My father two years ago seeded four acres and put on 30 lbs. of alsike and red clover and only 15 lbs. of alfalfa. The other clovers died and he had a fair crop of alfalfa. Last year, he seeded down eight acres to alfalfa, which looked fine last fall. He intends this year to seed down eight acres more.

Since father has grown his own seed he has sown only 15 pounds to the acre. He has four tons of alfalfa hay to feed and calculates to feed it to milch cows after the first of April. Later on you may hear from me again as to the result.—Hugh J. Weese, Prince Edward Co., Ont.

Note.—Those who are seeding alfalfa for the first time are advised to sow not less than 20 lbs. of alfalfa seed to the acre. Out in the western alfalfa growing states, where the crop is a specialty, they sow much more seed to the acre than we recommend. A good stand, however, may be secured with 20 lbs. to the acre. Any saving that one might make in sowing less than 20 lbs. per acre, would be greatly off-set by the poorer stand and consequent poorer yield. Sow 20 lbs. at least until you have satisfied yourself that a less amount will give a satisfactory stand on your land.—Editor.

FEATURES OF DAIRYING IN ALBERTA

From Farm and Dairy.

C. L. Marker, Dairy Commissioner for Alberta

Among the outstanding features of the dairy situation in Alberta for the coming season will be continued effort in the direction of further improving the quality of the creamery butter production through the extension of the plan of grading and quality basis payment of cream furnished by the patrons. This was started last year by the government creameries. Not only will the creameries operating under government supervision continue that work which resulted last season in the gain of 15 per cent. on butter grading "First" over the previous season but several of the more progressive individual creameries will adopt a similar course.

We believe that a fair grading system and a payment of a premium for quality will do more for the improvement of the butter output of our creameries than any amount of purely moral suasion that we may present from the platform and even through the press.

Another feature will be the improvement brought about by the application of the provisions of the Dairymen's Act as amended by the recent session of the Legislature. This Act is built on the principle of the square deal to all concerned and should go far towards establishing general confidence in, and give the patrons a better understanding of the principles of the creamery business. They are the interested parties and we find that the best patrons are those who take an intelligent interest in the business of the creamery that they patronize.

HERMIT AMERICAN SCATTERS MONEY

Amazing Deeds of Mr. Myrah Bayard Brown, Who Lives Aboard His Yacht.

CASH FOR THE ASKING

Beggars Surround Him All the Time and He Never Hesitates to Give Whatever Is Asked.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]
London, Saturday.

THERE is no more interesting or picturesque person in the whole United Kingdom than Mr. Myrah Bayard Brown, the wealthy hermit yachtsman of Brightlingsea. For twenty-two years he has lived aboard a palatial yacht, anchored in the same place in Colchester harbor, and has kept his identity a profound secret.

All that was known about him was that he was an American, wealthy, prodigally generous and eccentric.

He never has paid any rates, taxes or Inland dues. One way or another he has evaded them year after year. Recently, however, his case finally reached the law courts, and Mr. Justice Hamilton ordered him to pay an income tax on £50,000 a year. It was this decision which revealed Mr. Brown to the great public and has attracted the attention of all England to his unfortunate mode of life. Until then he was known only in the little coast town of Brightlingsea, off which his yacht is anchored. There he has been for years the one great local celebrity and the topic of about half the conversation carried on.

LOOKS LIKE THE LATE KING.

On I journeyed to the coast of the North Sea to learn what sort of a man he really was. Brightlingsea is a forlorn, desolate, unlovely little place, constantly swept by chill east winds and where almost the entire male population follows the sea for a livelihood. A genuine boatman, Elijah, by name, steers the famous scarlet boat a [illegible] Brown, lay anchored in mid-[illegible].

She is a fine vessel of graceful lines, [illegible] and painted black. She is [illegible] and expensively fitted up and [illegible], built for the late King [illegible] Prince of Wales, Mr. Brown [illegible] her from Sir William Pierce.

The tender was drawn up. Two or three [illegible] were to be seen moving around the deck. They paid no attention to my hails. After waiting alongside for about [illegible] minutes, which did seem, with [illegible] face and spotless white beard, [illegible] a yachting cap, came to the rail. His face and figure he bore a striking resemblance to the late King Edward.

I introduced myself and asked to come aboard.

"Any claims or penalties?" he demanded.

"None."

"Do you come to warn me yourself, or bring a warning, or be warned?"

"No."

Then I was allowed to come on board. I tried to get this strange man to tell me something about his history. It was no use. At all references to America or New York he shut up like a clam.

LONDON AN OPEN TOWN.

When I mentioned his tax suit in London he said:—

"Yes, I believe I've lost the suit. Anyway, I'm glad to have the matter settled. I shall stay right here and not move away. You see, London is an open town. The bell boats can come right there from Blackpool. There is nothing to stop them. Why, they have five hundred men under canvas there. Oh, yes, it's an open town."

I had taken off my hat. He noticed it and removed his cap. After a few minutes he slapped it on his head again, saying as he did so:—

"Better put on your hat. Only liars take off their hats."

Meanwhile I was unconsciously twiddling my thumbs.

"I don't know that signal you're giving me," he said, "so I can't answer."

And so for half an hour he talked in the same wandering, incoherent strain. His voice was pleasant and carefully modulated and his language that of an educated person.

Meanwhile eight rowboats were prowling around the vessel's side. Their occupants were there simply to beg of Mr. Brown's bounty without any reason for so doing except that they wanted the money. Twice while we were talking he went to the rail and tossed over coins. One I noticed was a sovereign, the other a silver piece.

This begging was nothing unusual. It goes on all day long and every day in the week. Elijah told me that twenty-six boats' load been out to the yacht that day carrying beggars.

NUISANCE OR BLESSING.

Although Mr. Brown would say nothing about himself, I found plenty of persons in the village to give information about him. The inhabitants are about equally divided in their opinion as to whether he is a nuisance or a blessing. Those to whom he has made presents are warm in their praise of his open handed generosity, while others say that his indiscriminate and lavish giving of money has demoralised the village.

It is not considered humiliating to beg from him and persons of all classes do it. His presents vary from a pound to a thousand pounds. He always has money with him in abundance. Once a month a man comes down from a banking firm in London with a large package of banknotes, gold and silver. This Mr. Brown carries in his clothes. He always pays in cash and never writes checks.

American Women Who Will Be Marvellously Bedecked for the Great Ceremony.

[Special Despatch.]

KING GEORGE has decided definitely to adopt as his State crown the crown of King Edward practically without modification, except having it made to fit his head. The historic crown of St. Edward, the official crown of England, with which the King will be crowned in June, must not be confused with this State crown.

The crown of St. Edward is used only at the coronation of a sovereign and for no other purpose, and never has been altered since the present copy was made, in 1660. It is made to fit the head of the King for the time being by changing the internal stuffing and pads. The State crown, however, is personal to the reigning sovereign and is or may be designed to suit the taste of each successive sovereign. Thus King Edward VII.'s crown differed in many respects from that of Queen Victoria. It is much lighter. It does not contain the Kohinoor, but it does contain in a detachable mount the smaller of the two principal sections of the Cullinan diamond, weighing 309½ carats.

The Queen consort has no definite design of crown pertaining to her, and Queen Alexandra had a very elaborate diadem with eight semi-arches or hoops. In it the Kohinoor figured. Queen Mary has chosen an exquisitely beautiful chased design, carried out entirely in diamonds set in platinum in such fashion that no metal work will be visible.

The total value of the regalia was estimated at no less than $15,000,000 at the commencement of the last reign. It then ranked as second only in money's worth to that of the Tsar of Russia. Since that time the Cullinan stones and several lesser jewels have been added. The actual market value of the famous South African stones is estimated to-day at about $10,000,000, so that the total price that would have to be paid for the regalia to-day if it were bought in the ordinary way of business would without doubt exceed a total of $25,000,000.

A MASS OF GEMS.

There will be present at the coronation ceremony from seven hundred and fifty to eight hundred peeresses and dowager peeresses, all of whom will wear their most magnificent gems, including some that are literally priceless, in that they are unique and, having no equals, have no standard of valuation.

Comparatively few persons, of course, will enjoy the privilege of witnessing the dazzling splendors of the ceremony in Westminster Abbey, but, thanks to the enterprise of Prince Alexander of Teck, many have had the opportunity of doing the next best thing. By paying their guineas, which will be devoted to charity, they have been able to inspect at their leisure many of the most beautiful of the crowns and tiaras to be worn by royal ladies and peeresses on the great state occasion. At the exhibition, held at Cartier's, in Bond street, the ornaments to be worn by some of the princesses were naturally among those to first attract attention.

The small circular crown of Princess Christian is unique, being the only one on exhibition with a setting of turquoise—the stones of prosperity. The turquoises alternate with very fine diamonds on raised points. The headgear of the Duchess of Albany is made up of a quadruple row of diamonds surmounted in front by a half sun, the rays of which are formed by glittering brilliants. Of unusual design is the tiara of Princess Alexander of Teck. It has slanted wheatears formed of diamonds in a curious old setting and meeting in front. The whole is divisible into corsage ornaments and brooches.

Of the whole display nothing was finer than the magnificent crown made for the Duchess of Westminster, valued at [illegible], the design is very quaint. There are loops and interlaced circles and scrolls of fine diamonds, and in the centre of each of the large four arches are set five [illegible] stones [illegible] among the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I'VE been meditating to-day on the surprising amount of of pleasure to be gotten by juggling about a few pieces of wood; in other words, rearranging the furniture in a room.

The spring fever, the call of the red gods, the spring passion for change and wandering is strong in your blood some morning, and as it is impossible for you to find an outlet in travel you are forced to seek a vent for these feelings in activities within the home. Consequently, it being the morning to clean the living room, you promptly decide that that room has remained in status quo too long, and forthwith you advance upon it and proceed to try out your old knowledge of permutation and combination with the amount of floor space and wall space and the pieces of furniture for your algebraic quantities.

Happily it is and the sum much easier than in your student days and visible objects much simpler to deal with than paper and pencil and elusive X, Y, Z's.

You begin, of course, by sitting on the couch, surveying the scene and taking stock of those exasperating pieces of furniture that for some inherent reason simply cannot be shifted around. The desk must stay right there between the two windows because that is the only good light, and the secretary can't be moved because it is the only piece of furniture of just the right shape to cover that marred place in the paper, and, of course, the reading table must remain in the middle of the room, but the couch and the two bookcases and the tea table and the big mission chair and the three smaller wicker chairs can all be juggled about to suit your fancy.

So, with the aid of your maid's stout arms, you let that fancy run riot, trying this effect and that, piling the books all out of the bookcases, pulling the pictures down from the walls, dragging the couch hither and thither, and juggling the chairs about like the little pellets in pigs in clover.

Finally, by dint of many appeals to your maid's judgment, by exhaustive demands on your own taste, and by aid of the wise decision handed down by a neighbour who dropped in to borrow a dash of cinnamon — her grocer being unaccountably late with her order—you make the final decision and proceed to restore order out of the chaos you have created.

Just about here your enthusiasm flags a bit, and you wish you hadn't been quite so prodigal and lavish in your upsetting of the established order of things, but your desire to have everything all settled before John and the children come home to lunch spurs you on, and by noon you have the room in order in its new guise.

Strange how very different and unfamiliar the most familiar piece of furniture can look from a new angle, now that couch — why it looks just like a visitor sitting there in that corner, and yet you've had it—yes, the year before Lois was born—twelve years.

Strange, too, how an arrangement that you once condemned, by the all-renewing action of the years, can be recommended again to you. Two years ago, when you made John help you take all the books out of those bookcases, so you could move them away from their station beside the fireplace ,you declared you'd never have them there again. And now you've put them back. Ah, well, that was two years ago. Isn't that reason enough for your change of mind And truly, they do look different now. Perhaps it is because the couch also is in a new place. You do hope that John will have forgotten the trials of that evening when he wanted so much to smoke and read the paper instead of moving books, but you have your doubts.

Luncheon time justifies those doubts. "Why on earth," is John's first question when you conduct him into see the wonders you have wrought, "Why on earth have put those bookcases where you said you'd never have them again? I remember one evening when you couldn't wait,"—etc.

But being a good John he subsides as soon as he has blown off steam, and tells you it looks fine and that you are a dear little manager. The children approve, too, as children always do of anything new, and altogether you are sure that you have had a very profitable and interesting morning, and feel quite as elated and excited—and incidentally as tired—as if you had been in town shoping and spent a a lot of money. And just think, all that pleasure and excitement quite, quite, "free gratis."

Some terribly artistic person has recently informed us that in every roo mthere is just one right place for each place of furniture, and that when this arrangement has been discovered it should never be changed.

My, aren't you glad that you aren't that artistic and can still revel in the delicious and inexpensive excitement of "changing things round?"

The fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon.
—King John, Act. III., Sc. 3.

King John, for the conduct of his wars in France, had ordered Faulconbridge to hasten to England to raise money and supplies by fair means or foul. In sending him forth he aptly personified peace and war; the one is well-fed, prosperous, happy; the other is lean, hungry, insatiable. King John evidently had Pharaoh's dream in mind when he spoke.

"Pharaoh dreamed; and behold, there came up out of the river seven well favoured kine and fatfleshed; and they fed in the meadow. And behold, seven other kine came up after them out of the river, ill favoured and leanfleshed ;and stood by the other kine upon the brink of the river. And the ill-favoured and leanfleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine."

Under ordinary circumstances such a dream might have been interpreted to mean that a prosperous nation was about to be devastated by war. The history of the world presents a series of periods of peace and plenty followed by periods of war and depression. The spectre of war that threatens the nations is ill-favoured and leanfleshed. It has a fierce hunger, and while devouring the enemy it devours the people that have resorted to its aid. Sometimes the conquering nation has had its resources so drawn up in time of war that it has been a greater sufferer than the vanquished.

What is it that makes the North American Continent so desirable? The Atlantic swarms with vessels continually carrying thousands of homeseekers to America. They are fleeing from lands where militarism holds sway; ill favoured war has been threatening their lives, leanfleshed war has been devouring their substance. Instead of seeing armed camps, they have visions of wheat fields ;instead of arsenals, factories. War has been feeding on them ;they are hard-visaged dull-brained, timorous. America is to them a promised land. There lies liberty and, the inevitable accompaniment of peace and industry, plenty. But even America gives abundant illustration of hungry war feeding on the fat ribs of peace. The early colonists had hewed out homes in the forests. The Revolutionary War laid waste the fields, destroyed the homesteads and slaughtered the toilers. It made heroes; but it made beggars too. It achieved great results, but there was nothing that it achieved that might not have been brought about by peaceful methods. By 1812 the nation had recovered from the results of the Revolutionary War. It was happy and prosperous, so prosperous that it felt itself strong enough to contest at arms with the greatest sea power in the world. As a result of the struggle the resources of the country were wasted, the fruits of the toil of years destroyed. In New England in particular prosperous towns were ruined and never recovered from the blow struck at their commerce.

The memory of the Civil War is still fresh, and its results are still felt. There are regions that yet feel the desolation wrought by the sword and torch of the invader. The nation is still taxed, nearly a half century after the events, to pay obligations incurred. So far as the United States was concerned the war with Spain apparently left no evil results at home. But even that war fed on the fat ribs of peace ;fortunately they were very fat and could stand a little reducing. Indirectly the war is still feeding on the nation. The United States through it entered the arena as a world power. She could no longer feel secure with a few warships fit only for police duty. The products of peace had to be taxed to make her on sea a worthy rival of England Germany and Japan. Capital and labour are both being taxed to feed hungry war even in the United States.

While this is being written "no war or battle sound is heard the world around"; all the nations are at peace, but hungry war is still preying on the ribs of peace. The income tax in England and the corporation tax in the United States would never have been required but for war and the need of being prepared for battle. It costs money to keep the teeth and claws of the wild beast War sharpened. The money cost is the least. For war purposes men are drawn from productive industries. The thousands on board warships and in barracks are unfitted for ordinary avocations. They produce nothing and the life of semi-idleness is apt to make them despise toil.

Visit the wheat and corn fields of the West or the wharves and warehouses of the East and learn how fair are the works of peace. To understand how horrible are the effects of war let the eye of the imagination view Georgia after Sherman's march to the sea, or Richmond at the close of the Civil War, or the Niagara Peninsula during the war of 1812; desolated fields, smoking ruins, plague and death where peace and plenty formerly reigned. The great task of humanity is to put an end to wars or the possibilities of wars. War is ill favoured, leanfleshed, grim and foreboding of aspect. Peace is well favoured, fatfleshed, smiling and attractive.

THERE is something probably that you did not know about Chocolates. The most expensive part of them is the chocolate coating itself. The thinner the chocolate coating, the less expense to the makers, and naturally the less enjoyment to you.

Most makers thin the chocolate with some substitute, so that the cream or hard centers will take up only a very thin jacket of chocolate when dipped.

You will find every piece of Neilson's Confectionery has a thick, heavy coating of the richest, most delicious chocolate—in its absolute purity—you ever tasted.

The centers are coated individually and special care is taken to have the chocolate of just the correct proportion to give that delicate, original flavor so quickly recognized by the connoisseur.

You get something worth eating—something different—something you will always remember with pleasure—when you eat Neilson's Chocolates.

"Chocolats des Aristocrates"—"Cherries in Maraschino" — and "Hard Centers" are only three of the different chocolates that Neilson's make.

30 other kinds, in different packages—and each the best of its kinds.

WM. NEILSON LIMITED, TORONTO.

"Well, Major, I suppose I jabbed the enemy so hard that the bayonet stuck in his body."

This the Major regarded as insolence, as doubtless it was, and he ordered me at once into the guard-house where I was left that night to meditate on the advisability of trying to be funny with one of Her Majesty's officers.

By the time the Major came around again, I knew how to fasten on my bayonet, but he had his eye on me, and ordered me out from the rear rank into the front. My own officers looked very uneasy at this transition, as well they might. Strutting up and down the rank, he sapped at me:—"Hold up your chin, sir."

I endeavoured to do so, but with indifferent success. One distinction between us and the Regulars was, that we could not keep our backs so straight nor could we hold our chins so high in the air, so I suppose that to a real military man we looked somewhat slouchy, but anyhow, the Major said nothing further until the next time he passed me when he raised his rattan and struck me a smart blow under the chin. I have no doubt that this Major was a brave man and possibly before that time, and since, has passed through many dangers with credit to himself, but I can assure him that he never came so close to death as when he struck me under the chin with his rattan cane. His good luck and mine carried him quickly past me. However, by the time he returned my chin was high enough in the air to satisfy anybody, and the wave of anger and resentment had passed away from me.

My final bout with the Major occurred in the Hutchinson House, the principal Hotel in the town. I don't know why the Company drilled that night in the large ball room on the top floor which occupied the whole length and breadth of the building, but at any rate such was the case. There was an intermission of half an hour or so when Captain Day called upon me to mount guard at the door with fixed bayonet and loaded gun. When I took my place he said half apologetically, the Major standing beside him:

"The Major and the officers are going down stairs for a few moments, but you are to allow nobody else to pass. I have chosen you because you are a stranger in the company and it will be less difficult for you than for another to withstand their persuasions."

"But suppose they force themselves past me?" I asked, not at al liking the duty thrust upon me.

"What is your bayonet for?" inquired the Major sharply, impatient at the delay.

I had some notion of answering that it was for sticking in the floor, but having no desire to spend the remainder of the night in the guard house, I kept silence. The other officers went down stairs, and as soon as they were gone a number of the volunteers got around me, their spokesman persuasively urging me to allow them to pass.

"It is absurd," he said some some truth, "that the officers should go down to guzzle at the bar while the Company is compelled to remain thirsty upstairs in the ballroom; an aristocratic state of things not to be permitted in a democratic country."

"I can't help it," I answered. "You canot pass until Captain Day has given permission."

"Oh, that's nonsense. He only put you here to please the Major. The Major is not our officer and Day won't say anything. Anyhow, we'll all be back before they return."

"I'm very sorry, but I can't allow it," I persisted.

What the outcome would have been I do not know, but some one shouted:

"It's all right; leave him alone!"

The members of the company massed themselves at the other nd of the room. I saw there was some excitement but could not make out what was going on.

The crowd at the end of the hall seemed to be diminishing, the cause of which deplotion I could not guess, but I was soon to be enlightened. Up the stairs two steps at a time, in a towering rage, sprang the Major, followed by the officers.

"How dared you allow the men to pass?" he shrieked at me.

"No one has passed down these stairs," I said.

"That is not true; half the company are down at the bar."

Before I could reply, the Captain spoke up:

"I see how it is, they have gone down the dumb waiter," which was indeed the case. The dumb waiter, which consisted of a sort of hand elevator with two shelves, for bringing refreshments up to the ball room, had been discovered by the lads, and they had carefully lowered two at a time, who had doubled themselves up on the shelves. Thus already half the company had descended and two stalwart fellows were at that moment gently lowering a couple more. The Major acted like a flash before anyone could stop him, scattered the group at the other end of the room, and either cut the ropes or thrust the men aside, and how there was an appalling crash, and a wild yell. The officers stood ux the door for a moment too astonished at this rough reposal to speak. After the yell a dead silence prevailed the large room, then a hollow voice came up the flue, saying:

"If you fellows think there is anything smart in doing a thing like that you are mistaken, and I'll thrash the man who did it. I believe that you have killed Sam Peters on the lower shelf."

As a matter of fact Sam was not much hurt, although he was knocked speechless for the time being, and the elevator was wrecked. The officers of the company went quickly down stairs to learn the fate of the fallen soldiers and there were low growls from the boys as the tyrannical Major strode away from the dumb waiter to follow, but no one raised a hand against him, although it was easy to see that if any one had made a hostile motion there would have ensued a general scuffle, out of which the Major would have emerged somewhat shopworn. He was evidently a man of violent temper, quickly over, for his face was pale as he approached me, and I imagine he was already regretting his rashness. As he went to go downstairs I presented the bayonet point to his breast.

"You cannot pass," I said.

"What!" he cried, all the color coming back. "None of your insolence, sir. I'll have you punished for presenting your gun to me."

"You are no officer of mine. I am under Captain Day's orders, and he said, let no one pass."

"You can't be such a fool as you look," replied the angry man. "You know very well that does not apply to me."

"It does while I'm here. You advance, and I'll show you"

Now look how uncertain a thing popularity is. The volunteers who but a moment before had been cursing me actually raised a cheer and cordially invited the hesitating Major to advance. What might have happened the God of War only knows, but providentially Captain Day came up at this juncture and relieved me of my guard duty.

By one of those curious coincidences that a man would not dare to use in a novel but which often happens in real life, I met the Major a few years ago on the coast of Norway, a little, old, wizened half-pay officer, retired; as mild as new milk. It is only fair to him to say that he utterly denied having struck me, and said that he would have been coutmartialed for doing so, which is probably true if I had belonged to the Regulars, but nevertheless the incident happened just as I have related it. However, the little man and I spent a most companionable hour together in the smoking room, neither of us holding any grudge against the other for what had happened many years ago in Canada when The Militia and I were co-operating.

SPRING CLEANING NOTES

From Farm and Dairy.

Could anything be more disgusting than the average hennery at this season of the year? Many henneries are not cleaned from fall until spring, and then from spring to fall again. Disease germs, and lice are given every opportunity to play havoc with the flock. This is particularly true in the warm summer months, as during the winter the temperature is too low for bacterial and insect growth to make rapid headway. The thorough cleansing of the hen house and the liberal use of whitewash would be time well spent. During the summer, if possible, the hen house should be whitewashed two or three times and cleaned every few days.

The present is a good time to get out the colony houses and chicken coops. A good application of whitewash here would be advantageous as well. Thorough cleanliness and whitewash are excellent preventatives of lice—the greatest enemies of young chickens.

ME AND THE MILITIA

Many years ago the Militia of Canada joined itself with me; the object of this union being the greater security of the Dominion. The combination was a gratifying success and reflected credit on the far-seeing statesmanship of the promoters. I have no wish to lay claim to a greater share in the defence of Canada than is justly [illegible] but it remains a significant fact which cannot be controverted, that since the Militia and myself joined forces no invader has dared to set hostile foot upon the free soil of the Dominion. Of course the moment the news of our junction reached Europe the Chancelleries of the old world at once became alarmed and hinted that our combination was a menace to them. They have since quieted down and accepted the inevitable. But speaking for myself, I hereby put it on record, that no thought of interfering with them ever entered my mind. I cannot answer for the Militia, of course, but my recollection of the lads who composed it is, that they were far from being a blood-thirsty lot. Our motto was "Defence" and not "Defiance" and if for a while we did terrorize the earth the fault cannot, with justice, be attributed to us.

It was in the charming and picturesque town of St. Thomas, Ontario that I joined the local body of volunteers, and so thoroughly was I drilled that to this day when I see an innocent horseman approach on the road I feel an inclination to drop o my right knee, place my walking stick in an angle of forty-five and prepare to receive cavalry. Some years ago in Syria I put a Turkish Company through the evolutions of Canadaian drill, and surprised myself, and the Company too, by the readiness with which all the cabalistic words of command came back to me. The Turks proved quick to learn which was rather odd when you remember that neither of us understood a word the other was saying. However, in drilling, practical demonstration goes much further than spoken language, and besides the language used by a British drill sergeant is a good deal more Turkish than it is English. No drill sergeant can hope to succeed who speaks the English language with propriety, as the old text books on grammar used to put it. Our drill sergeant used to imagine that "Shoe-la-humph!" meant "Shoulder arms!" and no one in our Company had the courage to correct him.

I was a stranger to all the members of the company when I joined it, and being a modest and retiring sort of person, as I am still, I knew very few of them when I forsook bloodshed, and at this date not a single name of those military heroes comes back to me except those of two of the officers. Captain Day had charge of the Company, and Neil Caswell was lieutenant who became Captain when Day retired. It gives me deep regret to put on record the fact that the troops we all unanimously desired to fight were those of the British Regular Army, and this entirely without any feeling of disloyalty to the old country. A section of the British Regulars was at that time stationed at London, which was then situated some 18 miles to the north of St. Thomas, and I suppose, unless great changes have taken place, the mileage between the two cities remains the same to-day. Added to our other troubles was the misfortune that periodically British officers came down from London to inspect us and put us through our drill. Now the British officer when you meet him on what he imagines to be social equality, is a very nice fellow indeed, usually genial and tolerably capable, a man who knows how to do things, and does them well, but he cannot help despising a volunteer, just as an expert in any trade despises an amateur, and added to this, we were Colonials in his estimation, and of course did not amount to anything, not belonging to a little island twenty-one miles off the coast of France, where he came from. The chances are that the British officer of to day takes a broader view of things than he did at that time. But I think the South African War has proved he is somewhat of an ass still. He probably knows more than his predecessor did, but my experience of the British officer then was that he was a conceited swaggering bully, and the only mistake the St. Thomas militia made during my connection with it, was to allow so many Regular officers to return alive to London. We might so easily have dropped them from the tall railway bridge or waylaid them on a dark road. Still our mercy towards them merely arose from the inexperience of youth and should not be held against us.

One detestible little rat that came from London was a Major whom I shall not name, but we called him in the Company, "Old Shoe-la-humph." He was an undersized individual who put on more side than the six tallest men you will find in England to-day. He wore high glazed boots into which his little trousers were tucked, and the sides of the boots he constantly slapped with a small rattan cane he carried, marching up and down before us, erect as a ram rod, with as much importance in his bearing as if he owned Canada and was in negotiation for the rest of the British Empire. Our officers were quite palpably in terror of him, and as for us, we frankly and cordially hated him. As my ill luck would have it, Major Shoe-la-humph descended upon us the second time that I had drilled with the Company, when my military knowledge had so far advanced that I knew it was the butt end of my gun that I placed to my shoulder and not the other end. Captain Day arranged his troops in two lines and he placed me very kindly in the rear rank, in the palpitating hope that my ignorance would be at least partially covered by the men in the front column, who had been longer at the trade. All went well until we came to the bayonet drill, which called upon me and the others to take the sharp-pointed triangular prong that hung from our belts at our hips, and snap it on to the muzzle of our gun. You whipped out your bayonet as a Westerner draws his revolver, placed its socket on the nozzle of the gun, shoved it home, gave it a half turn, when something clicked and there it was, or else something clicked first and you gave it a half-turn afterwards. I really forget at the moment just how it was, but anyhow, it was a puzzle that was beyond me. I fumbled and rattled away at it, and when the command came to Shoulder Arms my bayonet was up at the point of my gun, wobbling about like a loose-jointed lightning rod in a storm. I breathed a silent hope that it would remain in position, but this was not to be. The first order was to jab an imaginary man on an imaginary horse, and that passed off all right, because the snout of the gun was held upwards at an angle of forty-five. The next order I got through by exercising great care. It was to slaughter an imaginary infantry person in front of us. The third movement brought disaster; here we had to meet a mythical company coming up a slope, and so had to turn our guns over and thrust them forward and downward. The three-cornered blade described a beautiful arc in the air and to my horror and the consternation of the company, it cleared the front rank, stuck point first in the floor and there stood trembling, which indeed I was doing myself. The little Major, his face red with anger, strode up to the quivering bayonet like a roaring British lion.

"That man stand forward!" he cried.

I stood forward the front rank opening to let me through.

"What the devil do you mean by that, sir?" he shouted, shaking his rattan at the incriminating bayonet.

Now, in spite of the fact that I was more familiar with the adjusting of a plough-share than the firing of a bayonet, I was nevertheless a free man, and was unaccustomed to being addressed as if I were a particularly objectionable kind of a dog, so I had the check to reply:

AN EXHIBITION OF THE EMPIRE

About 10,000 Men Are at Work Preparing the Buildings and Grounds

The Coronation Exhibition at the White City at Shepherd's Bush, promises to surpass any of its predecessors, as it will show for the first time not only the products and manufactures of each country making up the British Empire, but will show them as far as possible in their own natural surroundings. How many races and nations will be represented no one knows yet, but an effort is being made to have a thoroughly complete representation. Saxon and Celt, Asiatic and African, men and women from the frozen regions and the torrid zone will be seen at the exhibition. It will be a new Babel, but one with a harmonious purpose, that of giving pleasure to its thousands of visitors.

In the Indian section, duplicates of some of the most magnificent palaces of the Dependency will be constructed, such as the Palace at Delhi, built by Shah Jehan, and the Taj Mahul, at Agra, Delhi, which is to be the scene of the Coronation Durbar, and is famous alike in the literature of India and of Europe.

About 10,000 men are at work in the exhibition buildings and grounds, including 50 clever Italian modellers of figures of all kinds, human and animal, graceful and fantastic.

One of the most interesting of the reproductions will be that of Cave of Elephants, which, situated on a small island in the harbor of Bombay, contains some extraordinary mythological figures and shrines of gods. A series of great waterfalls will be constructed, representing those of Niagara, the Zambesi, and Walora, in New Zealand, and over these 3,000,000 gallons of water will flow every day.

SIR HIRAM MAXIM

The inventor of some of the most deadly engines of war in the world, who resigned his position as a director in the great firm of Vicker's Sons and Maxim on his seventy-first birthday, and is now busily engaged in perfecting aerial engines of destruction, which, if they meet with the sanguine expectations of his contemporaries, Claude Graham-White and M Bleriot, will give England the supremacy of the air and relegate to the scrap heap billions of dollars worth of war vessels. Sir Hiram will also endeavor to perfect the flying machine to that stage of safety where it will appeal to sport lovers throughout the world as a convenient and easy means of travel.

FUTURE OF CANADA

The British Weekly's Forecast of the Destiny of the Dominion of Canada

The future of Canada is illimitable, and it is strange to think that it was only about 1870 that the vast possibilities of the North-West were at all adequately realised. Since then the impression of the physical greatness and resources of Canada has steadily grown. There have been difficulties of a great kind. The nation has seemed to halt at times. But whatever temporary checks may come, there is no doubt as to the rapid and certain increase of the wealth, the population, and the power of Canada. As Principal Grant powerfully and convincingly argued, a nation so conscious of its strength and its future will not consent to be merged in and dominated by the United States. At present there is no comparison between the population of the two territories, and annexation by the States would mean the suppression of the potent individuality of the young nation. Goldwin Smith never took full account of the depth and power of popular sentiment, and we believe that Canada will be more and more content to reckon herself with the Motherland and her other Dominions. But obviously the place of Canada by-and-by will be wholly altered. In the nature of things our little island cannot develop as Canada must develop, and we look forward to the day when Canada will attain a relative importance which will deprive Great Britain of her claim to a metropolitan position. Of course, in a sense, Great Britain must always be the metropolis of the English-speaking race in general, and of the British Empire in particular. But as no limit can be set to the increase of Canada, readjustment must follow, and when the time comes it will be adjusted on the lines of greater equality. The form of connection will change, but he change will merely strengthen it. We may cease to be alarmed by the spectre of an inevitable disruption of existing ties. Canada has before her the high destiny of the chief place in the British federation.—British Weekly.

CANADIAN MONEY

There are millions of good Canadian money invested in Mexico, Brazil and Central America that could, to the general advantage of the country, be better invested at home. ANTI-SOCIALISTS MAKE AN APPEAL

They Want a Half-Million Dollars as a War Chest for Fighting Socialism

The Anti-Socialist Union of Great Britain is issuing an appeal for $500,000 as a war chest for fighting Socialism. The appeal for $500,000 is in the following terms:—

At this moment of crisis in our history when, through the Cabinet, Socialist schemers are foisting on the nation a single Chamber Government, the Anti-Socialist Union appeals to the loyalty and patriotism of the British people.

The main bulwarks of freedom in the past have been the common sense, self-reliance, discipline and probity of the people. To destroy these, an incessant and systematic campaign has been waged by the Socialist leaders. We would remind the public of some of the features of that campaign:—

1. The Crown has been threatened and the Monarch insulted.

2. The House of Lords has been misrepresented and ridiculed; judges, for the fearless performance of duty, have been attacked on the platform and in the press; efforts have been made to pack quarter and petty sessions with Socialist J. P.'s.

3. Boards of bureaucrats, from whom there is to be no appeal, have in some cases, been substituted for the courts of Justice.

4. Large numbers of civil servants have been converted to Socialism. There has been a steady increase in the number of public officials; competitive examinations for many of the new posts have been dispensed with, and the number of new officials have been withheld.

5. There are at least 1,000 Socialists helping to administer the Local Government and the Poor Law. Councils have taken to trading in opposition to private enterprise; their accounts have often been inefficiently audited; in thirty years the local debt has risen from 193 millions to 568 millions.

6. Socialists are making strenuous efforts to capture the support and sympathy of those responsible for the education of the country. Socialist schoolmasters, dons, and professors are busy proselytising.

7. The funds and administration of trade unions have been captured by the Socialist conspirators, and men have been expelled from the unions for opposing the Socialist policy.

8. Attempts have been made to stir up mutiny in our Army and Navy.

We have already successfully established twenty-five schools in different parts of the country. At least one hundred schools are necessary in order to compete effectively with the Socialists, who hold 2,000 meetings per week.

In this country there are seven organisations, backed by a powerful Press, constantly spreading Socialism. One of these organizations alone expends over $600,000 a year on its activities.

We ask from the public a contribution of $500,000. That is not a large premium for an insurance against a revolution.

THE RARE CARIBOU

Unique Specimen to be Placed in the Museum of British Columbia

The first and only specimen of the rare caribou of the Queen Charlotte Islands to be exhibited in any country of the world will be given a place of special distinction in the British Columbia provincial museum, one of the three animals secured by the Indians on Graham Island, not far from Virago Sound, almost three years ago, having been successfully mounted by Curator Francis Kermode—more successfully than he had dared hope could be accomplished in view of the atrocious skinning of the animals by the native hunters and the condition in which the carcases were ultimately received in Victoria. The unique specimen is notably small as contrasted with the caribou of the mainland, being not larger than a fully grown mule deer, and would weigh approximately 225 pounds or less. It is exceptionally light in color, and carries the right horn only, the left—as in two-thirds of the specimens secured—being an absent quantity, a general deterioration or frequent malformation being attributed to prolonged inbreeding. The head is also much shorter than that of the mainland caribou, and the conspicuous frontal plough in the horn formation is missing, all of which stamp the Queen Charlotte Caribou as a distinct and separate species. That the specimens at the museum are fully grown is attested by the teeth, the front teeth being entirely missing, while the back bear every evidence of age.—Rod and Gun.

A PET MOOSE

Wanders About New Brunswick and Visits Barnyards

A pet moose is said to be wandering in the neighborhood of Plaster Rock, N.B., and making the lives of dogs a misery to them, says Rod and Gun. During the close season, three moose, a bull, a cow and a calf, wandered around feeding with the cattle and using their salt boxes. When the open season came on the bull and cow left for the wilds, but the calf remained and visited various farmyards. The abundance and variety of food evidently suited the calf, and having a malformation of one of its spikehorns it is easily identified. The farmers have become quite used to it and are taking measures to ensure its protection from any hunter who wishes for fresh meat without going to the woods in search of the same.

POP GO 100,000 WEASELS

That Number Will Be Wanted for Coronation Robes.

"No end of trappers," said a London fur store manager, "are on the war-path after ermine fur for the robes of royalty and nobility. The stoat, or ermine weasel's skin, only measures a foot long by three inches wide, so about 100,000 weasels will be wanted for Coronation robes.

"The more biting the cold where the animal is trapped, the whiter is the fur. And it is 'parky' in Siberia! During the last Coronation there was a weasel famine, and fine skins popped up to half-a-sovereign apiece.

"Ermine fur is used either plain or 'powdered' on the cape of the robe. There the rows of little black dots indicate the degree of the wearer.

"These dots, very carefully inserted at measured intervals, are made from the fur of the blue-black seal, dyed black.

"But, black or white, the seals are not having such a time of it just now as the weasels."

PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR AND PRINCE GEORGE

CORONATION CLAIMS

An Interesting Dispute as to Who Shall Bear the Great Spurs.

It is expected that two millions of visitors will be attracted to London by the magnificent proceedings in connection with the coronation of King George and Queen Mary. To many the appeal made by those proceedings will be merely the appeal of the spectacular; they will be drawn to the coronation as they would be to a Durbar in India, or to the enthronement of a Czar and Czarina, which for gorgeousness and lavish splendor outrivals the greatest spectacles East and West. For many the coronation ceremonies in London will have a high patriotic and religious significance. To others they will appeal strongly on the historical and heraldic side, and these latter will be interested in the hundreds of cases which are being considered by the Court of Claims—cases of hereditary claims to do certain things, or occupy certain places at the coronation proceedings. The case which is attracting the greatest amount of attention, as it is giving the Court of Claims the greatest amount of trouble, is the three-cornered one between Lord Grey de Ruthyn, the Earl of London, and Lord Hastings, to bear the Great Spurs at the ceremony. Each of the three can claim descent from the baron who carried the Great Spurs at the coronation of Richard II. The suggestion that the matter might be settled by the Court of Claims ordering a three-handled silver dish to be made, in which the Great Spurs should be carried, each of the three claimants holding a handle of the dish, would be regarded, of course, as little short of sacrilege by the upholders of the sacredness of all there fine points of ancient qualintness and historic ceremonial, which are reminders of the acts of personal service to the sovereign, upon which estates and titles used to be held. Viewed in the right historical perspective, they have their import, and play their part in making the coronation the coronation a pageant of historical interest and value.

An Italian has invented an automatic ballot-box. The machine registers the total number of voters and the figures for and against. All the voter has to do is to drop a disc into the slot corresponding to his decision.

"Bronchitis"

This is an acute inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the air tubes in the lungs.

The disease begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hoarseness, and there is a dry, harsh, croupy cough.

After a few days mucous begins to be raised. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color and is occasionally streaked with blood.

Cure the first symptoms of Bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to Consumption.

Mrs. D. J. McCormack, Cleveland, N.S., writes: "My little boy, two years old, caught a bad cold which developed into Bronchitis. He was so choked up he could hardly breathe. Reading about your wonderful medicine, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, I decided to try a bottle, and with such good result I got another which completely cured him, without having a doctor. I cannot say too much in its praise and would not be without it in the house as I consider it a sure cure for Colds and Bronchitis.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

The home should be a place where man is always on his good behaviour; our kindest words, our pleasantest smiles, and our most particular favours should be kept to exchange with our own household.

If your grown son or daughter have accomplished some difficult piece of work, rendering you essential assistance; or have climbed some step in the daily drill of study, or have acquired some new accomplishment, or added grace; or better than all have gained the victory over some bad habit or besetting sin — acknowledge it, see it, praise them for it. Let them see by your added tenderness, the deep joy and comfort it gives you. Thus you will create a great incentive to right conduct, and lay a broad foundation for a character which shall be redolent with a succulent fruit and fragrant blossoms.

A man who has made a happy home for his wife and children, no matter what he has not done in the way of achieving wealth and honor; if he has done that he is a grand success. If he has not done that, and it is his own fault, though he be the highest in the land, he is a most pitiable failure. We wonder how many men in a mad pursuit of gold, which characterises the age, realise that there is no fortune which can be left to their families as great as the memory of a happy home.

What can equal a mother's love for the boy? You boys have grown up from tender babies under a mother's watchful care. Ah, boys, how many heartaches do you cause that dear old mother! Do you realize the world of affection in a mother's heart? What joy can you have in her sorrow? What pleasure in her pain? Stop, my lad, and think of your mother's heart. You have it in your power to make it glad, or make it sad. Let your heart warm to hers as it did when a babe in her arms. Kindly stroke the gray hairs on her head and assure her that in your heart there is seated a deep and lasting love and reverence for her.

It is natural and right that a mother should wish to see her daughter well educated and even highly accomplished; and it is a mistake that good and careful education should unfit a girl for the homely duties of cooking dusting and general housework. On the contrary, those duties would be better performed if mothers would at the same time that they seek talented instructors for their daughters, impart to them some of their own culinary talent ;there would be more good wives and marriages.

Rascally and scoundrelly people for the most part come from iniquitous homes, from undisciplined homes. Parents harsh and cruel on the one hand, or on the other hand, loose in their government — are raising up a generation of vipers. A home where scolding and fretfulness are dominated in blood relation to the gallows and the jail. Petulence is a serpent that crawls up in the family nursery sometimes and crushes everything. Why, there are parents who even make religion disgusting to their children. They scold them for not putting in all their leisure time at church or some church gathering. They have an exasperating way of doing their duty.

Whenever young women begin trying to fit themselves for wives then a new social area will begin to dawn. There will be more happy homes less poverty, fewer divorces and a better moral atmosphere. There is a great deal of room for men to improve in the same line. Comparatively few men have definite ideas in regard to the home life they expect to live. If they do picture such a thing, they follow the outlines traced by some sentimental novelist. It is an impossible sort of place, in which he installs an angel. Nectar takes the place of coffee and the bread plate is filled with lotus.

In Dread of Something

You Can Scarcely Tell What—It May Be Hysteria, Insanity, Nervous Collapse

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

When the nervous system breaks down you live in a constant dread of something terrible about to happen.

Physical suffering cannot be compared to the mental agonies of the nervous wreck who fears that his mind may give way or that his body may be paralysed.

In this condition you must suffer alone for friends cannot understand or sympatize with you. They tell you to cheer up or that it is only imagination.

You can only throw off this depression when the nerve cells are restored to health by such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Your digestive system has failed to supply proper nourishment to the nerves and you are compelled to seek aid from other sources.

It will take some patience and persistent treatment, but there is no way by which you can so certainly restore health and vigour as by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

The best time to restore the nervous system is long before such a critical condition is reached. Such symptoms as sleeplessness, headaches, nervous indigestion, muscular weakness, loss of energy, failure of memory and power of concentration, irritability and discouragement tell of a failure of the nervous system and warn you of the approach of serious trouble.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50; all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

A LOVELY BABY BOY

This Mother is quite Enthusiastic over a well Known Food.

Mrs. J. W. Peterman, 34 Harriet St., Toronto, in writing about Neave's Food says "When I first knew one of my friends, her baby Jack was eight months old and dying by inches. She had tried three foods because her Jack could not digest milk. At last, I fetched her a tin of Neave's Food. At the end of a month, Jack was rapidly gaining flesh and was bright and happy. He is a lovely boy now and she declares Neave's Food saved his life. And it did.

Then I recommended it to a friend on Victoria Avenue. She had a baby 6 months old that was not thriving a bit. She put the baby on Neave's Food and at the end of three months, the baby was twice the size.

I have never seen two bigger, stronger boys than mine for their ages and we owe it all to Neave's Food. I have the utmost faith in Neave's Food."

Mothers and prospective mothers may obtain a free tin of Neave's Food and a valuable book "Hints About Baby" by writing Edwin Utley, 14 Front Street East, Toronto, who is the Canadian agent. For sale by all druggists. 24

Will Stand Acquitted.

On the great day of account it will be found, that men have erred more in judging of the honesty of others than in any one thing else, not even religion excepted. Many who have been condemned and had the stigma of dishonesty fixed upon them because misfortune disabled them from paying their just debts will stand acquitted by the judge of the quick and dead while others cover dishonest hearts and actions undetected by man. It is our earnest desire to eradicate the impression so fatal to many a young man, that one cannot live by being perfectly honest. You must have known men who have gone on for years in unbroken prosperity and yet never adopted that base motto, "All is fair in trade." You must have seen too noble examples of those who have met with losses and failures, and yet risen from them all with a conscious integrity, and who have been sustained by the testimony of all around them, that though unfortunate, they were never dishonest. When we set before you such examples, when we show you, not that "Honesty is the best policy," but that it is the very keystone of the whole arch of manly and Christian qualities, it cannot be that every ingenious heart does not respond to the appeal. Heaven grant all such to feel that an "Honest man is the noblest work of God" and to live as they feel.

Some people give according to their mean, others according to their meanness.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Joash Repairs the Temple. 2 Kings xi:21—xii:16.

Golden Text—Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly. 1 Chron. xxix:9.

(1) Verse 21—To what extent may we trust the reasoning and deductions of a bright, and good boy, seven years of age upon matters with which he is familiar?

(2). What immediately preceding events had led up to the boy Joash (Jehoash) being crowned King of Judah?

(3) Verse 1—Who was Jehu?

(4) Zibiah was the mother of the boy King Joash, but who was his father?

(5) Verses 23—Is the statement herein ade that "Jehoash did that which was right in the sight of the Lord all his days," literally, or historically correct? (See 2 Chron. xxiv :17-22).

(6). Take two men, both previously good, in responsible positions of great temptation, both having been religiously trained, one having a vile and the other a good ancestry; one of them late in life becomes a bad man—on the law of averages which is it, and why?

(7) Verses 4-5—What method or rule should we adopt in giving money to the church?

(8) What is the relative obligations upon a man for keeping up his own house and the House of God?

(9) Verses 6-8 — What were the priests bidden by the king to do with the money which the people brought in, and how did they carry out their orders?

(10) Why is it either wise or unwise for a pastor to be the treasurer of his church?

(11) What is your opinion as to what these priests did with the money?

(12) Which is the right, or better place to collect money for God's cause, and why, at the homes of the people or in the church?

(13) Verse 9—If Jehoiada had gotten up a series of concerts, or lectures, or bazaars, or tea meetings, or had set the women to making quilts selling them, instead of making the people to give their money direct, would it or not have been more in keeping with God's plans for financing His church, and why? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club).

(14) What modern plan for paying money to the church, most nearly answers to putting it into a chest at the church door, and what is the advantage of the plan?

(15) How many instances can you recall of dishonesty in handling church funds, and how do they compare with the number you can recall of dishonesty in banking and other business institutions?

(16) Verses 14-15—Ought a church to gladly pay the regular market value, or should it expect to get work and material for less?

(17) Verses 15-16—Should a Christian church spend money for style, or for spectacular effect, or for anything beyond that necessary for comfort?

HELPING THE LAUNDRESS

From Farm and Dairy.

To remove bluing.—When garments become discolored with bluing soak one hour in warm water, to each gallon of which add two tablespoonfuls of kerosene oil, then boil for an hour in this water, rinse and they will be as white as at first.

To remove mildew.—Mildew on white goods may be quickly and easily removed by soaking for two or three hours in a weak solution of chloride of lime.

To take out scorched spots.—When white goods become scorched, cover the spots with a paste made of common starch and cold water, spread on thickly and lay in the sun. If badly discolored the second application may be necessary, wash with soap and warm water and the spots will entirely disappear.

To take out ink stains.—Ink may be easily removed from carpets, floors, and furniture by simply scrubbing the spots with vinegar. If spilled upon any garment, rub the fabric in the vinegar until all trace of it is gone. Of course the sooner the vinegar is applied the quicker the ink will come out, but this is a never-failing method.

Hanging clothes in wind.—Clothes dried on a windy day always iron more easily as there are none of the tiny exasperating wrinkles that give so much trouble when dried on a still hot day. But when the frayed corners have to be mended the housewife thinks less kindly of the wind. I find no trouble in drying clothes even in a hard wind if they are fastened to the line properly. Put on in the usual way; then place the corners of the garment together, lift to the line in about the centre of the piece, and pin securely. The air can circulate freely through it, and it dries as well as if hanging loose, while the corners cannot whip about.

To clean a skirt.—A light wool skirt that had been dry cleaned several times was finally cleaned in the following manner: A good suds was made from soft water and ivory soap, quite soapy too. The skirt was soaked in this water and rubbed between the hands (not on a washboard) and no soap put directly on the goods, no matter how dirty. It took three rinsings in soapy water and one in clear to get the old cleaning fluid out of the goods. Then the garment was squeezed out (not wrung) and hung where it would dry quickly. When nearly dry it was pressed carefully, and looked almost as good as new.

Suffered Greatly From Heart Trouble.

NERVES WERE VERY WEAK.

Mrs. John Farrell, Rose Hill, P.E.I., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

"About five years ago I suffered greatly from heart trouble, and my nerves were very weak. After seeing several doctors and using their medicine, I got no relief until a friend told me of your Heart and Nerve Pills. I took two boxes and they effected a complete cure. I can recommend them highly to all nervous and run down women.

"I have advised many others to try them and they have all been cured of the same trouble."

The proper action of the nerves, so important to the well-being of the heart, depends entirely upon the general condition of the nervous system. If there be nerve derangement of any kind, it is bound to produce heart derangement.

In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is combined a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders, as well as act on the heart itself, and in this is the secret of their success in curing so many cases of heart and nerve trouble.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"ORANGE LILY SAVED MY LIFE"

These words or expressions having the same meaning are contained in hundreds of the letters I have received during the past year. Many were from women who had suffered agonies from falling of womb; others from women who had escaped dangerous surgical operations, as the tumors and ulcers had been removed by the action of Orange Lily; and others who had suffered from suppressed menstruation, leucorrhoea, painful periods, etc. For all these and the other troubles brought on general as Women's Disorders, Orange Lily furnishes a positive scientific, never-failing cure. It is applied direct to the suffering organs, and its operation is certain and beneficial. As a trial actually proves its merit, I hereby offer to send, absolutely free, a trial bottle, sufficient for ten days' treatment, to every suffering woman who will write for it. Enclose 2 stamps. TWO YEARS IN CENTRAL PRISON IS MAHAFFY'S SENTENCE ON THEFT CHARGE

Convicted of Breaking Into East City Stores on April 7—William and David Drain are Allowed to go

SUSPENDED SENTENCE

Walter Mahaffey was this morning sentenced to two years less one day, in the Central Prison, Toronto, for complicity in the recent East City robberies. The following were the charges laid against the prisoner:—That he did on the 7th of April break into the shop of J. R. Bell, and commit an indictible offence. He pleaded not guilty, but he was convicted. That he did break into the store of George Wheeler and commit an indictible offence. He pleaded not guilty, and afterwards changed his plea to guilty.

Detective Newhall gave evidence to the effect that he arrested the prisoner, and in conversation with him regarding the affair, the prisoner admitted entering Bell's store. He stated also that on the night the robberies were committed he met two of his friends, who had driven in from the country, and they all went to a local hotel and had a drink together. He also told him that they went to East City after this and committed the robberies.

The Chief corroborated Detective Newhall's statement.

Mahaffey asked that he be allowed to give evidence, which he did as follows: "Dave and Wm. Drain were with me, when the East City thefts were committed. We broke into Sullivan's first, and I think about 15 bottles in all were taken, but I only got 11 bottles. Then we went to Manion's, and David Drain got the maple sugar and preserved apples. We then went to Wheeler's and David Drain broke into the store. We all went in and tried to break open the till, but could not, and in the attempt we upset the counter. David Drain then got a quarter of beer and we got out. As soon as we got out the Drains got into their buggy and went home leaving me.

Crown Attorney R. E. Wood asked to have the prisoner's past record read, which was accordingly done. It read as follows:

Oct. 28, 1907—Two months in gaol at hard labour for theft of a bicycle.

Aug. 14, 1908—Three months in gaol at hard labour for stealing another bicycle.

Aug. 20, 1908—Out on suspended sentence for stealing a bicycle.

Aug. 14, 1908—Ten days in gaol for stealing a horse and buggy.

Oct. 19, 1910—14 days hard labour for getting money on false pretences.

"Mahaffey, this is a very heavy record," said His Worship, "You seem to have graduated in crime, and these last offences are quite serious. Inasmuch as all that I have said to you has been ignored by you, I judge that you be confined in the central prison, Toronto, for a term of two years less one day.

Charged with Stealing a Sheep

David Drain was called. He and Robert L. Anderson were jointly charged with stealing a sheep last July, the property of Edward Fitzgerald. Robert L. Anderson was put in the box and pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing the sheep. He was asked to tell all the facts of the case. He said that David and Thomas Drain were his cousins, and were staying at his home for a while, and were there when the theft took place. He said that on the evening of the theft that David and Thomas Drain and himself got into their buggy and went out for a drive. It was between 8 and 9 p.m. He stated that they drove to the farm of Fitzgerald, and went into an old barn and got the sheep. They put it into the buggy and when they got home the Drain boys killed the sheep, and he went to bed. He stated that when he went to bed the sheep was alive but the next morning he saw it cut up. He denied selling the skin. He stated that the family ate all of the sheep, except some that the dog stole. Mr. Wood stated that even the dog was like the rest of the family.

Thomas Drain was then put in the box, and stated that he was guilty of stealing the sheep. He told the circumstances as follows: "Bob and Dave and I talked the matter over that evening before we went to Fitzgerald's, and when we got it we brought it home to Anderson's, and it was afterwards eaten. Mrs. Anderson knew that the sheep was stolen because we told her. The sheep was killed in the cellar. I started to cut its throat but did not make a good job of it and Dave finished it. Mrs. Anderson was in the cellar part of the time. She held the lamp while we skinned it. Afterwards the skin was sold in town here, because I was with Robert Anderson when he sold it."

Mr. Edward Fitzgerald, who owned the sheep, was then put in the box and stated that he missed only the one sheep last July and it belonged to a flock that he had sold, but that had not been taken away. When asked if he had been paid for the sheep, he replied that he had been. He said that the prisoner's uncle had paid him $5

BOY SCOUTS PRESENTED WITH PATROL COLOURS

Presentation Made Last Night at Concert in Armouries by His Honour Judge Huycke---Charged Them Not to be Mean, Selfish, Cowardly or Ungentlemanly

An interesting feature in connection with the concert under the auspices of the 57th Regimental Band in the armouries last night was the presentation of patrol colours to the different patrol leaders of the Boy Scouts by His Honour Judge Huycke. The various troops paraded to the armouries from the market square head by the buglers and made a fine showing.

In makin gthe presentation of the colours His Honour Judge Huycke referred to the rapid progress the Peterborough Boy Scouts had made since their inception in Peterborough. They had gone on from good to better, and he hoped they would continue to go on from better to best. The organization now had a membership of nearly two hundred, under capable leaders, with Mr. W. J. Neale of the Central school, as chief Scout master. His Honour expresse dregret at the intending departure of Mr. Hughes, one of the Scout Masters who would be greatly missed among the Scouts.

All the Boy Scouts of Peterborough were not present. One of them was in Toronto at Massey Hall receiving from the hands of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province a silver medal for bravery in saving a life at the risk of his own. Cecil Richardson, the boy in question, was in every way worthy of the honour that he was receiving.

In presenting the colours to the patrol leaders, Judge Huycke charged them never to do anything mean, selfish, cowardly or ungentlemanly.

The different patrol leaders in connection with the Owl, Beaver, Pee-wit, Eagle, Curley, Otter, Hound, Kangaroo, Wood-pigeon, Cuckoo and Wolf Patrols advanced to the platform and received the patrol colours amid great applause.

CHIEF HOWARD GUEST OF HASTINGS FIREMEN

The village of Hastings has just purchased a new Seagraves truss ladder for their fire brigade similar to those in use in Peterborough. The Reeve and some of the Councillors invited Chief Howard to go down and give the boys a drill. The Chief secured the permission of Ald. Morgan and went yesterday afternoon for that purpose. The firemen put on a concern in the town hall in the evening and Chief Howard gave a short address on "Fire Protection." The principal feature of the concert was a mock council put on by the firemen, which was exceedingly humourous and thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience that was in attendance. At the close of the concert Reeve Thomas Howard and the members of the Council gave the firemen a banquet at the Spellman house.

Peterborough, April 22, 1911.

To all whom it may concern:—

The Management of the Grand Opera House have had a great many complaints made to them about people coming late and annoying those who have come early to get in their seats and enjoy the play.

It is very annoying to have people come in half an hour after the play has started and have them walk before you or have to stand up to let them pass. It mars the pleasure. The Management try their best to make it as pleasant as they can for their patrons, and they have the orchestra start sharp at eight o'clock, so that the people who are there in good time have good music to listen to.

We hope the public will kindly remember in future to be at the Grand Opera House in good time, and by doing so they will make it much more pleasant for all concerned. The Theatre doors are open at 7.30 and the curtains go up at 8.15 or should go up at that time, but we have often been compelled to hold the curtains longer to allow the late comers to get in their seats, and not annoy others by passing before them when the performance is on.

We hope the public will kindly remember this notice and with kind good wishes to all, we remain,

Sincerely yours,
J. J. TURNER & SONS,
Owners and Managers,

CURED THE WIFE AND HUSBAND TOO

Great Work Done by Dodd's Kidney Pills in one Quebec Family

Thomas Lauriault had Kidney Disease and his wife Bright's Disease, and Dodd's Kidney Pills made them both well.

Lac Cayamont, Que., April 21. — (Special.)—There is a world interest in the simple story of Madame Thomas Lauriault of this place. In her own words, it is as follows:

"Dodd's Kidney Pills cured my husband of Kidney Disease and myself of Bright's Disease. We recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to all who suffer from Kidney or Bright's Disease."

This is a splendid example of the grand work Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing among the plain people of Canada. Kidney Disease is the commonest of all ailments among those who have to work hard, because the kidneys are the first part of the body to feel the wear and tear of heavy work.

When the kidneys go wrong the blood goes wrong, and the whole body goes wrong. Rheumatism, Dropsy, Diabetes and Bright's Disease are the usual results. Dodd's Kidney Pills cure these by simply curing the kidneys.

A WARM FIGHT

In Committee on Ways and Means in House of Commons

Special wire to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, ONT., APRIL 23.— The House of Commons rose at 3 o'clock this morning after a warm fight in the Committee of Ways and Means on the reciprocity agreement, when W. O. Sealey, the Liberal member for Wentworth, moved to strike out of the agreement the clause respecting fresh and dried fruits and vegetables. Deputy Minister McIntyre admitted the amendment to vote and it was defeated by twenty to seven.

WAS PRESENTED WITH MEDAL FOR BRAVERY

Scout Cecil Richardson of Peterborough was Honoured Last Night in Toronto at Display of Scout Work in Massey Hall---Three Scouts Have Their Presence of Mind and Courage Recognized.

Massey Hall, Toronto, was filled by a well-pleased audience last night, the occasion being the first public display in Canada of the Baden-Powell Boy Scouts.

The stage was appropriately decorated for the occasion.

An ebxibition of the various phases of Scout work was given, which included bridge building, mat-making, flag raising, and other routine of camp life.

A pleasing feature of the evening at the conclusion of the first part of the programme was the presentation of the awards to three of the Boy Scouts for conspicuous acts of bravery. Among the number was a local boy, Cecil Richardson, who at the risk of his own life, rescued a boy from a watery grave in the Otonabee river.

Supt. McClellan of the Trent Valley Canal, who is a Boy Scout enthusiast, accompanied Cecil Richardson to Toronto.

Excellent music was provided by the Queen's Own Rifles Band, and the event of presenting the awards to the brave Scouts was marked by loud cheering on the part of the Boy Scouts who were present.

WILLIAM SHAKSPERE

Born April 23, 1564. (St. George's Day)

Died, As To The Body, April 23, 1616

"Shakspere is the most modern writer in our language. It would seem that in one fruitful moment the genius of England gave birth to a poet who interpreted his country to itself and to the world, once and for all time; his thought and language being the everlasting mind and utterance of his race at its highest."

BAND CONCERT WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

The concert under the auspices of the 57th Regimental Band, in the Armouries last night, was a most successful affair, and a very large number of people have to thank Mr. Glidon and the members of the band for a very delightful evening. It was the first time the band has been heard in a concert since last autumn, and their music was thoroughly appreciated. The organization is in a most flourishing condition at the present time, and has never been heard to greater advantage than last evening. The programme included several very heavy numbers, noticeable in this connection being Bellini's beautiful overture "Norma," which was undoubtedly the master-piece of the evening and was played brilliantly and confidently by the Band. A fantasie of Russian folk songs entitled "Souvenir de la Russe" another number deserving of especial mention. The number gave Bandsman Barnes an opportunity to daplay his consummate ability as a clarionetist, while the tubular chimes were introduced into the finale with pleasing effect. "At the Mill," a dainty little descriptive number was charmingly played as the new sacred march "Religioso No. 4," which closed the programme. In a lighter vein was the Southern Tone poem, "Georgia Sunset," an infectiously catchy "rag" number.

Band Sergt. Hughes contributed one of the gems of the evening in his cornet solo "Loves Old Sweet Song," which he played with his usual skill and acceptance.

St. John's Choir boys, under the direction of Mr. Devey, demonstrated their own ability and the thoroughness of their training, by singing several much appreciated choruses, including "The Maple Leaf" and "O Canada." Arthur Johnston sang the solo "The Sleighing Song" most successfully, with the choir boys taking part in the chorus and Cyril Devey and Lorne Conway made a hit in their rendition of the well-known Tinker song.

Mr. Kennedy, who is here in connection with the formation of a local Herd of the Order of Moose, contributed a very clever pianologue.

THE SUDDEN DEATH OF MR. HUGH WADDELL

Death came with startling suddenness this morning about ten o'clock to Mr. Hugh Waddell, at the family residence, "Beechfield," Monaghan Road. He had complained of pains in the chest last night, but arose this morning as usual. Returning to his room he lay down on the bed and passed away shortly afterwards. He was a prominent citizen of Peterborough, a man of sterling character and his passing away will be widely regretted. He was born in the township of South Monaghan 75 years ago. His parents, Robert Waddell and Sarah McClelland, who came of a prominent family of County Down, Ireland, were among the earliest settlers to this part of the country. For thirty-six years he conducted a mercantile business at Centreville, and after retiring resided at the homestead in South Monaghan. In 1878 he was married to Mary Waddell. Sixteen years ago he came to Peterborough and made his home at the late residence, "Beechfield."

The late Mr. Waddell had been a warm friend of Queen's University, where he established valuable scholarships. He was a Presbyterian in religion and a member of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church. Surviving besides his widow is one son, Roland M. Waddell, who is on his wedding tour to Europe, but has been communicated with. The sisters are Mrs. F Hurdon, of Toronto, and Mrs. R. C. Boswell, of Elora. Mrs. Wm. Needler, of Lindsay, another sister, predeceased him some time ago.

The funeral will take place Tuesday afternoon with the service at 2.30 o'clock, from his late residence, "Beechfield," to the Little Lake cemetery. Rev. James Rollins will officiate. It is requested that flowers be omitted.

A BATTLE IN SENATE

Prospects of a Hard Fight Before Reciprocity Bill Passes the Higher United States House—Hard to Sum up Situation

FORWARDED MONDAY

Special Wire to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, APRIL 22. — Supporters of the Canadian reciprocity bill, while elated this morning over the success of the measure in the House of Representatives, candidly admit that the greatest battle has yet to be fought in the Senate. That body while nominally Republican, is divided into a dozen factions of insurgency on both sides and nobody has attempted to sum up the situation for and against the bill. It will go forward to the Senators Monday and despite the threats of Chairman Underwood as to what may happen if the Senate delays the bill, there will undoubtedly be a delay, as the United States Senate considers itself just as important a legislative body as the House of Representatives and vested with just as much power by the people. Canada will still be in the forefront in the House of Representatives next week when the farmers' free list bill will be debated.

CANAL TRAFFIC.

The traffic through the Canals of Canada for the year 1910 show a very substantial increase over the figures of the previous year. The total traffic for 1910 was 42,999,608 tons, an increase of 99,366,377 tons. To indicate the growing importance of canals as media of transportation, it may be mentioned that the tonnage of Canadian canal traffic in 1901 was 5,665,269 tons, and in 1910, as stated, 42,999,608. From 1901 to 1906 the increase was 65 per cent. and the five year period, from 1906 to 1910, the increase was 308 per cent., making the increase for the ten year period 373 per cent. This increase in canal transportation is an indication that the days of canal traffic are not over and that in addition to being efficient regulators of railway charges, they are gaining in popularity, as means of moving, especially freights of the more bulky character, over the ever-increasing number of railways.

PROCRASTINATION.

The wisdom of prompt action was lately demonstrated in rather a pathetic way. Two sisters had listened to an address directing attention to the Canadian Government Annuities system as an opportunity for safe investment to people of small means, and with the result that both resolved to take advantage of it immediately. Each had the sum of $2,000 invested in the stock of a certain bank. The younger sister, aged 65, did not delay but at once sold her stock and made the purchase and is now in receipt of an income of over $50 quarterly, the first instalment of which was paid to her three months after the purchase had been made. This gives her for life an income equal to 10 per cent. of the amount invested. The elder sister intended to follow her example, but unfortunately on the advice of Mr. Knowall, put off doing so until it was too late. The bank failed and her savings of a lifetime were swept away in the twinkling of an eye. But not only was her $2,000 lost but she became indebted to the bank under the double liability clause in the sum of $2,000. Had she invested the amount as did her sister in the purchase of an Annuity she would have had an income, no matter how long she lived, of $225 a year. Further information in regard to this splendid system of government beneficence may be obtained on application to your postmaster, or to the Superintendent of Government Annuities, Ottawa, to whom all letters go free of postage.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL.

Secretary Wise of the Horticultural Society, is on the war path in the campaign of increasing the membership of the Horticultural Society, and is meeting with much encouragement, gaining much new membership. In one business place yesterday he got the proprietor and his whole staff as members. There is no reason why the membership should not be increased to a thousand.

Every public spirited citizen is interested in making the city beautiful, a city that will be known and quoted as the cleanest, tidiest, brightest and most beautiful in the Province; the best place to make a happy home with all the aesthetic conditions provided.

This can be done by a little cooperation, but this cooperation must be general—we all—citizens and city corporation—must work unitedly to this end.

With beauty generally distributed; with clean, tidy streets, trim boulevards overhung, as they must be in any case, by stately street trees, with beautiful, clean shaven, flower brightened lawns; with these conditions prevailing in every part of the city, the value of property would be greatly improved.

To this end the Society is working, and, with this object, it wants to increase its membership so as to secure general cooperation, upon which the best general results depend; and they should succeed.

Apart from the higher motives of making the city beautiful, and a better and brighter place to live in, membership in the Horticultural Society is not the payment of a fee; it is an investment, which yields as can be demonstrated, a return, great beyond the dreams of usury—170 per cent. We thus illustrate, the big return made from an investment of one dollar in a membership ticket of the Horticultural Society. You thus may open the following account:

Horticultural Society Account

Dr.		Cr.
To membership fee	$1.00	By 12 bedding plants or equivalent	.50
To balance (credit of City Beautiful)	.70	By 16 bulbs	.50
		By Horticulturist for 1 year	.50
	1.70		1.70

The premiums that go with the membership, would cost, retail the prices set down; but the society buying wholesale can finance the business and cover expenses. With such inducements in the way of direct return and overpay from the price of a subscription there should not be a home in Peterborough, unrepresented upon the membership roll of the Society.

At present attention seems to be concentrated upon the business section. But the war must be carried into the residential districts. We must get the ladies enlisted. Where beauty and taste are concerned they are miles ahead of the men, and when they get their minds made up, they always find a way for their will. If in any certain street we can get the ladies rivalling each other in the way of beauty of premises and street fronts, in as energetic a way as they rival each other in the matter of hats, the results would be prodigious.

Let the good work go on. Roll up the membership of the Horticultural Society to a thousand. With the awakened and intensified spirit, and interest, thus aroused, we should have conditions revolutionized, and the goal of Peterborough Beautiful would be in sight.

THE TIRE COMPANY BY-LAW.

On Monday, April 24th, the qualified electors will be called upon—will be given the privilege—to vote upon the by-law authorizing the loan of $40,000 by the city to assist in the establishment of an important new industry.

In deciding how to vote upon this proposal, the ratepayer is urged to consider the question with an open mind and without prejudice.

Strictly considered, the proposal is not a loan, in the ordinary sense, but simply the guarantee of a loan, or the loan of the citizens' credit to the company. The city can borrow money at a much lower rate, than any industrial corporation, and hence the city proposes to borrow the money and advance it to the company by instalments, upon the employment of a defined number of hands, and the erection of buildings of the value of $40,000, and the installation of machinery to the value of $75,000; a total of $115,000, the Company to pay interst at 4½ per cent.

The loan is secured by a first mortgage on this plant. A further condition is that the Company must show $150,000 of paid-up capital.

The security offered is ample, more than four times the amount of the loan or guarantee.

It is difficult to see how the city runs any risk of loss. The property covered by the mortgage is, in value, far beyond the amount of the loan, and the prospects of the success of the Company are excellent. Its business is mainly the furnishing of supplies to an industry—the motor-making industry—which is only in its infancy. The demand for motors is large and bound to increase as the wealth of the country increases. The Canadian West, rapidly growing in population and wealth, will be an increasing market. The people there make money rapidly and spend it freely. The little city of Medicine Hat, for instance, with a population of 7,000 or 8,000, has now one hundred motor cars, as compared with about twenty in Peterborough—less than a quarter of the number, with nearly three times the population. There will be an increasing demand for motors, which means a corresponding demand for the products of the Independent Tire Company of Peterborough. With a market for its output, an industry has the conditions of success in its hands.

Therefore, with ample security, and the certainty of the establishment of a successful business, there does not seem to be any risk in aiding the new enterprise by the loan of $40,000. Especially as the security for the loan is ample. Besides, the Company's liability is continually decreasing by the repayment of $2,000 a year, while the security remains intact; for the buildings and machinery must be kept up to the mark upon which the loan is made in the beginning. In ten years the city will have the same security for the $20,000 of the loan still unpaid that it had in the beginning for the full $40,000—a security value from three to five times greater than the full amount of the loan.

As to the value of the machinery required—$75,000—that is easily ascertained. The invoices of the manufacturers and an examination by an expert mechanician, will easily show the city whether or not the value is there.

The ratepayers are urged to turn out and cast their votes. The proposal seems to be so evidently in the interests of the city's industrial growth and manufacturing importance that the danger of the defeat of the by-law does not come so much from the adverse sentiment and vote as from the failure to record the vote of those in favour of the by-law and the industrial growth, which means the development of every other interest.

Apathy and indifference are a greater obstruction to progress than overt opposition; the one is a dead weight that cannot be moved; the other arouses interest and provokes activity.

The indifference of those ratepayers who favour another advance step in our manufacturing development, should not lead to the defeat of a proposal which aims to give the city another important new industry.

STRIKE AT THE ROOT.

Mrs. Thornley, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of London, Ontario, in making some strong statements in regard to immorality in the London schools, initiated a controversy or discussion that has spread throughout the province and has elicited the general opinion that in the way of morals and morale there is something sadly lacking in the teaching of our schools. The Ontario Educationists who recently met in Toronto passed the following resolution:

Resolved that a petition be sent to Hon. Dr. Pyne, minister of education, urging him to take the necessary steps to place personal hygiene and moral purity in the curriculum of studies, and to have treatises on these subjects printed in pamphlet or booklet form for teaching and reading by the pupils.

Did these educationists go far enough and in the right direction, in demanding a specific remedy for a general disease? Of course it is to be premised that there is a responsibility resting upon parents in respect of the moral training and instruction in the duty and desirability of personal purity. But with this responsibility ignored, or entirely disregarded by many parents, we naturally look to the school to stand in loco parentis to the pupils entrusted to their care. And this is, unfortunately, to a large extent, dependence upon a broken reed. Our schools, classed as educational institutions, are merely mental training schools.

The chief thing that differentiates the human mind from the animal, apart from the higher capacity for reasoning is the moral quality associated with the human mind. Some animals can be trained to perform certain acts, through the operation of mental processes, at the word of command, showing that they have the mental faculty of understanding human speech, in a crude way, it is true; but in such a way as to co-ordinate mental processes with physical action. But beyond that point training cannot go. Any attempt to stimulate and cultivate moral qualities must fail, from the fact of the absence in the lower animals of the moral sense.

In what respect do our schools go further, except in degree, but not in character? What can the curriculum of our schools do beyond training the minds of the pupils? To what extent, if any, except in the most incidental and perfunctory way, is the ethical nature of the child appealed to, his moral faculties developed, and moral sense intensified, or, as must be done, in some cases, created. Nearly the whole energies of the teacher must, of necessity, be bent to meet the demands of the curriculum, and to prepare for the ordeal of the all-important examinations, less a test of educative accomplishments, than a demonstration of the contents of a mental attic, piled high and crammed with miscellaneous intellectual lumber.

The so-called education that deals only with the mind, to the exclusion of ethics and aesthetics, can hardly be regarded as successful in fitting the subject, or object, of our school system, with the equipment and qualifications that make for the best, in manhood and womanhood. Character building is far more important than mind cramming, or even, mind training. To make the man symmetrical, the development and culture of the intellectual, moral, and aesthetic natures must proceed pari passu. It is said that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing, but a great deal of knowledge, without the counterpoise of moral quality, is much more dangerous.

In the absence of moral training, in the absence of moral convictions, founded on moral principles, we shall have children justifying the complaint of Mrs. Thornley. And the grounds of this justification will not be removed by the surface expedients suggested by the educationalists—impracticable on their very face. Treatises on the subjects of sex relations, legitimate or noxious, could not be used as text books for reading and comment by teachers, in mixed school classes of boys and girls, as is inevitable with our plan of co-education. Under such conditions the teaching on such subjects as called for by the resolution would be more suggestive of evil thoughts than productive of good results. In this respect it seems better to bear the ills Mrs. Thornley says we have, than fly to others that we know not of. If parents and our spiritual pastors and masters cannot cope with the duty in these regards, that naturally and becomingly appertains to them, we cannot expect lady teachers to instruct a class of boys, or male teachers, a class of girls, on subjects that cannot be decently discussed promiscuously between the sexes. The school will never be the place to deal with such matters directly—only through successful moral training that will develop the principle of doing right because it is the right thing to do, and avoiding wrong doing because that is the right thing to do. We do not destroy an evil tree by lopping off a few twigs—this only stimulates growth—we strike it at the root.

RELATIVE SUPERIORITY OF CANADIAN TRAFFIC ROUTES

(Monetary Times.

Canada has little to fear from the improving of the Erie Canal route, or, indeed, any transportation route that the United States can construct, if she be true to herself, and take full advantage of the great natural resources which Nature or Providence has given her, says Mr. Robert Bedford, chairman of the Royal Commission on Transportation, 1904, in an interesting article in The Financial News.

These are so great as to give Canada the absolute control of the bulk of the export and import trade of the great West and North-West of the continent, United States as well as Canada, if she should want it. But, strange to say, her action in the past would incline one to think she does not, as I will endeavour to show later. I hope she will soon awaken to a better understanding of the great possibilities for advancement which she has within her power.

Trade will, in these days of keen competition, always take — indeed, must take—the shortest and cheapest route, a few cents per ton frequently influencing business. Such being the case, it is clear that if Canada has the shortest and cheapest route, its proper use will ensure her the trade; and that she has both, and other important advantages, in her favour the following statement of distances will conclusively prove:

Comparative Lengths of Transportation Routes.

Following are the comparative lengths of transportation routes between grain and cargo-collecting ports at head of Lake Superior and the ocean ports of the United States and Canada:

United States Routes.	Miles.
From Duluth by lake to Buffalo and thence Erie Canal barge to New York	1,480
From Duluth by lake to Buffalo, and thence rail to New York	1,445
From Fort William by lake to Buffalo, and thence Erie Canal barge to New York	1,353
From Fort William by lake to Buffalo and thence rail to New York	1,323
Canadian routes—
From Duluth by lake to Port Colborne, and thence by Welland and St. Lawrence Canals to Montreal	1,338
From Fort William by lake to Port Colborne, and thence by Welland and St. Lawrence Canals to Montreal	1,216
From Duluth by lake to Georgian Bay ports, and thence by rail to Montreal	1,623
From Fort William by lake to Georgian Bay ports, and thence by rail to Montreal	991
From Duluth by lake and Georgian Bay Canal to Montreal	1,656
From Fort William by lake and Georgian Bay Canal to Montreal	934

Distances in Favour of Canada.

The above distances are so greatly in favour of Canada as virtually to give her control of the transportation trade of the entire West, export and import, eastward and westward, if she choose to take advantage of it, even if nothing more could be urged in her behalf. But it fortunately happens that much more can be said in favour of the Canadian routes, through immense savings in transhipping expenses. Every bushel of grain or ton of cargo going eastward or westward by United States transportation routes has to be transhipped at Buffalo, at enormous expense, into barges, if the route be via Erie Canal, or into railway cars, the cost of which transhipment can be easily shown. The through freight rate on a bushel of grain from Lake Superior ports to New York, or other United States Atlantic ports has averaged for many years about 6¾c., of which the lake steamer, carrying it for 985 miles gets ¾c. to 2c. per bushel, according to season and demand, and the Erie Canal barge or railway 4½c. to 5c. per bushel on 460 miles. This is, seemingly, a most unfair division; but it is supposed to be necessary to cover transfer charges at Buffalo and expensive canal and railway freight, with other charges incidental to this expensive mode of traffic. Much of the expense incidental to the United States routes (and as much against the United States lake vessels by diversion with the Erie Canal barges and railways) is saved via the Canadian routes by the smaller Canadian vessels being able to take the bulk of their cargoes through the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals to the ocean port without transhipment, so enabling them to earn the full through freight on all cargo not transhipped. This is a very great point in their favour, which is naturally taken the fullest advantage of, and works well for the proprietors of the Canadian vessels, but the reverse for the owners of the grain or other cargo carried from the West, who pay much higher rates of freight on all they export and import than is really necessary.

CONVERTED.

The Peterborough Review says, as follows:

That the day of higher tariff is done on this continent is apparent to all students of economics. The reasonable solution of the situation in Canada at least would be the appointment of a permanent tariff commission to scientifically adjust the scale of duties so that the manufacturers are given reasonable protection where necessary, and yet the consumer given the benefit of such competition as will prevent undue profits.

The Review is coming to its political senses in advocating what the Examiner has advocated for years—tariff reduction and a tariff commission. The good old Tory doctrine of a protective tariff "as high as Haman's gallows" is abundant, as with us the good old Tory theory that the producer pays the duties. The conversion of our contemporary illustrates the familiar hymn—

While the lamp hold out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.

A NEW CIVIC GOVERNMENT PLAN

(Watertown (N.Y.) Times.)

Watertown Times: Lockport, N. Y. has a plan for city government which it claims is an improvement on the commission system. It is based on the principle of treating the city as a corporation. The stockholders (the people) elect a board of five directors (city council.) These directors, who are not expected to give their whole time to the city, get no pay. They are vested with full legislative power but have nothing to do with administration, except that they elect the general manager—the city manager, he is called. The manager need not be a citizen of the town. He may hail from anywhere in the country. He is to receive a large salary. He appoints every city officer; he has full power and responsibility; but he may be removed by the council at any time.

Lockport, as an exchange puts it, believes it is the way to get absolutely competent service in running its affairs. It goes on the theory — plenty of evidence to support it, they say — that the comparatively small salaries paid under commission government will not attract trained ability, but the best citizens will serve for the honour of the thing when entirely relieved of administrative detail and asked only to meet occasionally for legislative purposes.

SOME MILITARY NEWS

Colonel Hemming, D. O. C. and Lieut.-Col. Douglas Young, D.A.A.G., Kingston, were in Peterborough on Tuesday night last and were the guests of the officers of the 57th Regiment, at the Officers' quarters at the Armouries. Upon the invitation of Lieut.-Col. Stevenson, O.C., 57th, a number of officers of the 3rd Dragoons and the 24th Battery were also present.

Amost delightful social evening was spent and many complimentary remarks were made by the officers of the local garrison concerning Col. Flemming and Col. Young who are soon to pass out of active work in this military district. As is generally known, a re-arrangement of the military districts in Canada is shortly to go into effect, and Col. Hemming is slated for service in the military district, having its headquarters in Toronto. As to Col. Young he is being relieved by reason of the age limit. The two district staff officers, therefore, just came up to spend a social evening with the officers of the local garrison and to say good-bye.

No two officers of the district staff have been more popular in Peterborough than Col. Hemming and Col. Young. The former as D. O. C., of this district, has most undoubtedly brought the active militia of district No. 3 up to a high standard of proficiency and at the same time has not been too severe. Col. Hemming is a splendid executive officer and possesses good organizing ability. He is above all, a hard worker, thorough in his methods, but not harsh in the carrying out of his duties. He is in thorough touch with every officer in the district and has ever been a good friend to all. The kind words spoken of him on Tuesday night were the sincere sentiments of every officer of the local garrison. It is the wish of all that circumstances will develop in such a way, that some day soon, Col. Hemming will again be attached to this district.

A Jolly Good Fellow.

The officers of the local garrison were also sorry to have to bid good bye to Col Young. Everyone felt happy when the great big Colonel was around. His visit to the headquarters of the various companies of the militia of this district was always looked upon with pleasure. When the work of inspecting the stores was over the Colonel enjoyed a rabbit hunt, and the echo of his rifle will be missed in the woods that skirt some of the little villages in the north country, that constitute the company headquarters of some flourishing rural limits.

A Chaplain Regrets.

The officers had to say good-bye to still another comrade-in-arms, Capt. Langfeldt, chaplain of the 3rd Dragoons. As has been announced, Capt. Langfeldt leaves in a day or two to assume the rectorship of a parish in Simcoe County. Capt. Langfeldt took occasion to thank the officers of the 57th Regiment for the hospitality they had on many occasions extended to him during his stay in Peterborough. He would miss the pleasant associations of the Peterborough garrison, but would look back with happy memories to the enjoyable evenings he had spent as a guest of the 57th.

New Lieut. Fee.

One of the youngest officers of the Peterborough garrison is Lieut. Calvin P. Fee of the 24th Field Battery. Lieut. Fee has just recently been gazetted. He is one of the smartest military men in Peterborough, having served in South Africa and has been identified with the regular force for some years. Lieut. Fee is not, of course, any stranger to the 24th, having been a non-commissioned officer in that corp since its organization. The 24th Field Battery is to be congratulated upon securing as an officer a young man of Lieut. Fee's ability, enthusiasm and ability.

Petawawa Camp.

The 3rd Dragoons will go into camp this year at Petawawa. The exact date has not yet been announced, but it will most likely be about June 13th. The 3rd Dragoons has had a number of officers attending the school during the past month or two and should be in first class shape for the company camp.

Capt. Wallbridge.

Capt. Wallbridge of the Madoc Company of the 49th Hastings Rifles was in town for a day or two this week and was a visitor at the local armouries. Capt. Wallbridge was amazed at the magnificent quarters the local garrison possesses. He thinks that they cannot be surpassed in Canada. Speaking of the 49th the Capt. says it is in grand shape and that they experience little, if any, trouble, in recruiting to full strength.

For this reason alone, a bottle of D. D. D. should be kept on hand in every household. A free trial bottle will show you the merits of this great remedy as a complexion wash.

Two Years in Central Prison

for the sheep last week, after the charge had been laid. He said that he did not know who stole it before, and as soon as he found out he went and demanded payment.

David Drain professed to be innocent of the theft, inasmuch as he was not aware that they were stealing it. He said that Anderson asked him to go for a drive up the road, and they went to Fitzgerald's farm. He said that from the conversation that had taken place between them that he was led to believe that the sheep had been bought and that they were just going after it. He admitted having stolen hens before.

His Worship, Magistrate Dumble said that he found them all guilty, and he thought that it was a very sad case to see such young men, who have a future before them, lowering themselves to such a state. He said that it was a great misfortune to act like that. He would let the judgment stand until the rest of the charges were heard.

Robert Anderson was then charged with stealing a turkey, the property of Geo. Whibbs. He pleaded guilty.

Robert Anderson and Thomas Drain were jointly charged with stealing a number of hens from Thos. Chamberlain on the 14th of August. Both pleaded guilty.

William and David Drain were jointly charged with entering the shop of J. C. Sullivan and committing an indictible offence. They pleaded guilty, and the Crown Attorney asked that the charge be dismissed. A similar charge was laid against them regarding the breaking into of J. R. Bell's store, and it also was dismissed.

Mr. E. L. Goodwill asked that Anderson be dealt with leniently as his mother and sister depended upon him for support. He also asked that his youth be taken into consideration, as he still has a chance to reform. Mr. F. D. Kerr, who appeared for David Drain, also put in a like defence for him.

His Worship said that the offence was about the last that he would ever think of laying down to a farmer. He stated that it would be very unpleasant for a farmer to not be able to rest contented, thinking perhaps his neighbor would rob him. In view of the ages of the prisoners, he consented to act upon the suggestion given, and said that he would reserve judgment for a week, and during that week the prisoners might go free, and further that they would have to pay the costs of the prosecution, and at the end of the week if they had the costs paid the judgement would be that they go on suspended sentence. Every three months they will have to report to the Chief of Police. The young men, David and Thomas Drain and Robert Anderson will therefore apepar before His Worship next Saturday morning for sentence.

Mrs. Bettis Receives Handsome Brooch From Parents of Rescued Boy

Mrs. J. H. Bettis, who lives on the east bank of the Otonabee, just south of the Hunter Street bridge, has been agreeably surprised by the receipt of a very handsome gold pearl brooch from Mr. and Mrs. Dickson, of Campbellford. A week ago yesterday it will be remembered Mr. and Mrs. Dicksons young son had a narrow escape from drowning in the river, being rescued in the nick of time by Jas. Ellis of the Peterborough Mattress Company. He was carried in an unconscious condition, to Mrs. Bettis' residence, where he was revived after an hour's work. Mr. and Mrs. Dickson have sent the brooch to show their gratitude for Mrs. Bettis' kindness and sent with a card stating that the gift was not as a recompense but as a remembrance.

This big egg weighs 4½ ounces, and its larger circumference is 8¾ inches, and the smallest, 6½ inches. Mr. McLean's big egg beats them a', so far.

AM I IN OR OUT?

NEW YORK, April 20.—"If a customer gives me a ten dollars bill and I take out for a twenty cent package of cigarettes, and the customer then asks me for five ones for the five dollar bill I have handed out, and he then pushes back the five dollar bill and the five ones and gets back his ten dollar bill, how much am I out and why?"

This is the question that thirty-seven different employees of the United Cigar Stores Company were asking themselves yesterday, for a most affable man had been active with a new trick of the flim-flam order that had caught every man it was tried on.

"Here I have been behind a counter for twenty years and was certain I knew every trick that any man could spring, and it got me," said the only one of the victims who would talk. "As I figure it out I am due to pay the company $4.80 out of my salary next week in order to make the cash register figure right.

"It was worked on me like this: While I was about as busy as I usually am at ten o'clock in the morning a tall, thin amiable looking young man makes a quick dash into the store and gives the loud yell for a package of cigarets which sets him back twenty cents. He shoots an old and crumpled ten dollar bill across the counter and then he busies himself lighting a cigaret.

"Of course, I've got so I make change automatically and I dropped on the counter a five dollar bill, four ones and some small change.

"Was that a ten dollar bill I gave you?" asked the flim-flam expert's expression, and when I told him it was he looked puzzled and slipped the four one dollar bills and small change into his pocket and shoved the five dollar bill back to me.

"'Give me five ones for that,' he said.

"I placed five ones on the counter and he showed the five ones and the five dollar bill back at me, and said:

"'I guess after all I'd rather have the ten dollar bill; let me have it back will you?'

"And I let him have it back, honest, just tossed it on the glass top of the counter and threw the five ones and the five dollar bill back into the drawer of the cash register, and he was a block away before I realized it, and then it hit me like a case of the jumping toothache. I saw in a minute but it was a minute too late.

"At four o'clock this afternoon one of the chaps in the headquarters telephoned me and started to tell me that there was a flim-flamer working our stores and that he was sending an expert out to explain the thing to all of us so that we wouldn't be caught, but I cut him off. I learned later that he caught thirty seven of our clerks and many bar keepers on the upper west side."

At the offices of the company a reporter was told that the branches had been robbed, but further information was denied.

DELIGHTFUL PROGRAMME GIVEN AT ST. ANDREW'S

Scotch Concert Last Evening was a Most Gratifying Success—Large Attendance was Present

GREATLY ENJOYED

A delicious treat is scarcely expressive enough to describe the programme at St. Andrew's church last night the 'Scotch concert,' under the auspices of the Women's Foreign Mission Society. The evening throughout was a most enjoyable one. When the first part of the programme was over, refreshments of a very dainty character, were served, and the social side, in general, was cultivated. The event was featured by a large crowd. The items on the programme were all of a Scotch nature and were immensely enjoyed by all present. Rev. Mr. Rollins, the pastor, made a neat and appropriate speech, in which he congratulated the ladies, upon the success they had attained regarding the way their arrangements of the programme were carried out. He also spoke of the large number of Scotch members who had attended, and expressed his pleasure at this fact. There undoubtedly were a large number of Scotch people present.

Programme.

Mr. James McKenzie was the chairman of the evening and filled the position very acceptably. The delightful programme was as follows:

The New Grand Central Terminal in New York is Undoubtedly the Greatest Traffic Centre in the World

WITHOUT A STAIRWAY

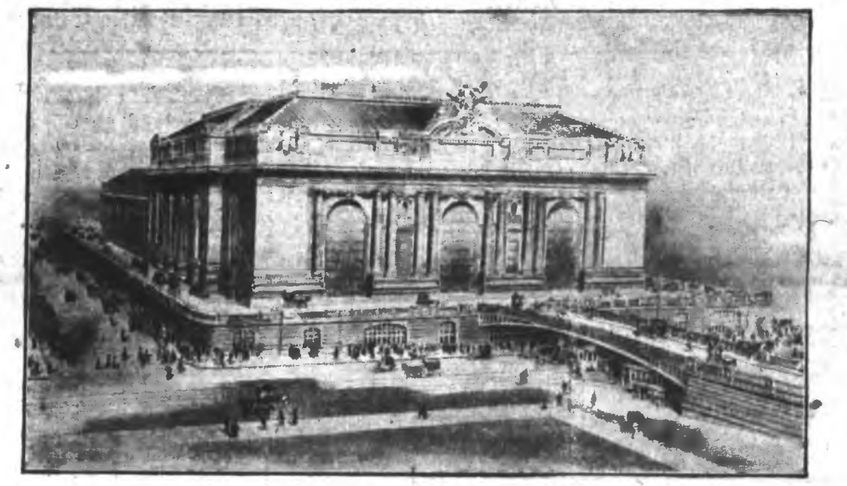
Time is one of the most important things in the world, especially in a great railway passenger terminal, which is the gateway for millions of travelling every year. The station has to be so arranged that the vast army of people who use it day after day can pass to and from their trains with the utmost ease and in the least possible time. This problem has been solved by the New York Central Lines. Their New Grand Central Terminal in New York City will be a station without stairways.

That is why, when passengers debark in the new Grand Central Station they will find that the landing platforms begin to rise gently before they get up to the head of the train they have arrived on. They will not see the locomotive that pulled them, nor will they see the baggage cars, because the platform will have risen above the level of the cars before they have walked that far.

The new Grand Central will be the largest railway terminal in the world—more than twice as large in every way than anything that is even planned as yet. The demolition of the old terminal and the construction of the new one have been carried on without interrupting or delaying the movement of 60,000 passengers and 400 trains a day. At no time since the operations began have the facilities for handling passengers been reduced. Even now the waiting room of the temporary terminal on Lexington Avenue is larger than it was in the old station, and there is greater concourse space and a larger number of tracks in use than at any time since the station was opened in 1871.

Instead of a single structure, this new gateway to New York City will be a group of magnificent buildings.

The First Grand Central Station, where Madison Square Garden is now, could be placed in the Express Concourse of the New Terminal



MAIN BUILDING NEW GRAND CENTRAL TERMINAL

But all the machinery of this vast terminal—the signals, the tracks and the hundreds of trains—will never be seen from the street. They will be no more in evidence than the elevators in a great office building are.

This terminal marks a new era in the vertical building of railroads. Modern terminals in great cities must be below the street level hereafter. This has been made possible by the supplanting of steam with electricity.

THE STAIRLESS STATION

The new Grand Central, which will be finished about two years from now, will be the greatest city gate on earth. One of its unique features is that it will be a station without stairways, the only one of the kind in the world. In place of the stairways there will be "ramps"—broad, gently sloping ways along which the rivers of human traffic will flow quickly and safely.

This was decided upon only after months of study and the most severe test with the subway lines. On the third level will be the 25 tracks for the suburban trains, and underneath these, running east and west, under 43rd ad 45th Streets, will be subways for handling the inbound and outbound baggage.

Sectional View of Grand Central Terminal Showing Ramps and Subway Connections

It has been made necessary by the high price of New York City real estate. The cost of producing the space for one car (exclusive of the cost of the station) is about $30,000.

The new terminal will have four levels where the old had one. The gallery on the grade of 42nd Street will be the top level. The next will be the concourse, which is on the level of the 12 tracks that will handle the through trains. This will connect with the subway lines. On the third level will be the 25 tracks for the suburban trains, and underneath these, running east and west, under 43rd ad 45th Streets, will be subways for handling the inbound and outbound baggage.

ly practical tests. In the planning and building of a great railway passenger terminal it is not so much a question of constructing a place for trains to run in and out of easily as it is of getting the people to and from these trains with the least possible friction. The "human element" is the biggest problem of all. About 25,000,000 passengers use the Grand Central every year. The new station will be able to handle four times that many comfortably. From the streets or subways they can reach the trains on even the lowest level beneath the surface without using a single stairway.

The ramp idea was first used by the Romans in their fortified camps so that chariots could be driven in and out. Only of late years has it been employed at all in buildings, and never before in a great railway terminal on such an extensive scale. The Grand Central associated architects, when they drew their preliminary plans, used the idea to a limited extent. The plans of this great work are scrutinized and passed upon by several committees composed of men who have made a life study of getting great crowds from the place where they are to the place where they wish to go. They are all specialists in the "human element" side of railroading, which is the big element when millions of passengers a year have to be moved. They realized the possibilities of the ramp idea at once and seized upon it. They studied ramps wherever they could find them. They watched people by the hour passing up and down them. They pounded and descended ramps themselves over and over again. Then these intensely practical men, realizing that they had hold of the biggest application of the ramp idea that had ever been attempted, in handling vast crowds in the greatest railway passenger station in the world, went to work and had one ramp after another built and torn down. These experimental ramps were made on different grades—different percentages of inclination. Some sloped upward at the rate of 3 feet in every hundred; others at the rate of 11 or 12. As fast as each one of these was constructed these mighty men in the railroad world went out and tested them for themselves. They did not get a lot of employees to walk up and down them and have scientists make elaborate calculations as to the exact amount of potential energy expended, but each by actual experience tried to excel the other in becoming a ramp specialist.

OFFICIALS AS RAMP EXPERTS

Among them are men of every physical type that is to be found in the average run of railway passengers. Some are tall, some short, some fat and some lean. Some are young and some are past middle age. Grips, dress suit cases and all sorts of hand baggage were provided. These pieces were packed and weighted to the maximum that they would be in the hands of any traveller trying to compress the most travelling equipage into the smallest space. One after another, over and over again, these men of the committees would pick up a grip or dress suit case and walk from one end of the ramp to the other as though they were hurrying from their trains to catch a street car. Then they would walk back again as if they were hurrying to make their train. Then they would try it with two heavily loaded suit cases, one in each hand. After each experiment they would dictate to the accompanying secretary a full report of just how them moving rapidly up and down these slopes impressed and affected them. Other records were kept as to the length of the inclined ways, the time it took to traverse them and the weight carried by each of the committee. Then women were called upon to aid in the experiments. The Central employs a considerable number in various capacities. Typical women were selected and asked to make the same tests. There were tall and short, fat and lean among them also, and they to carried hand baggage of varying weights. They were asked to give absolutely frank impressions of their experiences. These were recorded with the utmost care.

It was by these absolutely practical tests that the best gradient of these inclined ways was ascertained and decided upon. It was found that a rise of 8 feet in 100 was hardly noticeable to anyone carrying heavy hand baggage, and this grade was fixed [illegible] maximum that should be used. Of course, the percentage of

Some people get the idea because a suit bears the semi-ready label that, it, being the signet of high quality and distinctive style, must of necessity be a prohibitive price.

This is not so; the price of the semi-ready hand tailored suit is no more than the ordinary hand-me-out kind. It does not prohibit the young man of minor salary wearing good clothes; in fact, the label is a guarantee that he will get a dollar's worth of value for 100 cents.

the grade is controlled somewhat by the physical requirements of the building—the space available and so on. Whenever possible the grades are only 3 or 4 per cent.

TO HANDLE 70,000 PASSENGERS AN HOUR

In this way the problem was solved. When the new Grand Central Terminal is completed a passenger can get off a train at the lowest level and reach the street outside without mounting a single step. The present Grand Central accommodates 60,000 passengers a day; the new Grand Central can take care of 70,000 in an hour, which is twice the carrying capacity of Paddington Station, London, which is supposed to be the largest station in the world in point of passenger traffic handled. The new Grand Central could not do this easily and safely if it were not for these systems of ramps. They are so arranged that the crowds of people going to suburban or to through trains never come in contact with each other or with those coming from trains. The line of the ramps is always a straight line. The crowd moves all in one direction, and the bigger the human river the faster it will flow. It moves forward without the least friction. Men cannot run into each other and get quarrelsome, to they are all moving the same way. If a man wants to pick a fight he must overtake someone ahead of him. The ramps are so wide that there is no excuse for people jostling each other.

The express concourse is but six feet lower than the sidewalks of 42nd St., the slope of the ramps is almost imperceptible. The difference between the level of the concourse floor and that of the express train platforms is also so slight that there is almost no grade at all in the ramps between. This is partly accounted for by the fact that the station platforms are raised so they are level with the floors of the cars into which the passengers enter.

A woman with her hands full of parcels or luggage cannot pick up her skirts when she is going downstairs. They drag and sweep the steps, which is annoying and dangerous in many ways. People will step on them and stumble, and accidents cannot be avoided. Going down these inclined ways, however, there is little fall down stairs every year hurrying to catch a train than there is when one is hastening along a level floor. Lots of people, both men and women, fall down stairs every year hurring to catch trains. Whenever an accident of this sort occurs it is pretty likely to be followed by a suit for damages. A railroad not only does not want accidents of any sort, but it is willing to spend a good deal of money to prevent them and to keep people pleased. The New York Central people believe that by this system of inclined ways throughout their great terminal that they will not only save money by eliminating accidents, but will add very materially to the comfort and pleasure of their patrons as well.

THE GRAVITY IDEA

The outward-bound crowds, which are the most difficult kind to handle in any great passenger station, will find their train level in the new Grand Central by the force of gravity. If a barrel of water, for instance, should be upset at, say, one of the 42nd Street entrances to the terminal, it would keep moving, theoretically, until it reached the track level of the suburban trains, the lowest of all. The stream would flow slowly first down a gentle incline until it reached the level of the main waiting room. Beyond that it would move along a short ramp between the waiting room and concourse, across that and then over the other ramps to the tracks below. The streams of human travel will follow the same course. They will all move in the same direction and will be guided automatically in the direction they should go. They will move freely and as swiftly as they may wish, but under all circumstances they will move safely. People hurry to get aboard a train, but they do not hurry so much in coming from it. The distance the street and the trains will be the same with either stairways and ramps, but a man can run up and down the inclined ways without losing his breath or his temper. He could not do this if they were stairways instead. The subways will be reached from the train levels by ramps also. In one or two cases there are flights of steps but these are not absolutely necessary because there are ramps leading in the same direction. There are elevators in the terminal, too, but these are simply an added luxury and convenience.

The stairs that show in the picture at the east end of the express concourse lead from the gallery, on the level of Park Avenue, to the concourse floor. Passengers arriving in vehicles or entering on the gallery may also use the elevators on the north side of the concourse.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST TRAFFIC CENTRE

The new Grand Central will be the centre of the most extensive combination of passenger transportation lines in the world. It will conect not only with the subway, but the McAdoo Tubes to New Jersey by way of 42nd Street and Sixth Avenue, the Belmont Tube to Long Island, other subways planned but not yet constructed and the elevated and surface lines already in existence. It will be an inland in the centre of a sea of traffic but one that can be reached quickly by a score of routes. Travelling will be reduced to a minimum of difficulty.

The incoming traveller may have the choice of many ways in reaching his destination in the city. The existing subway lines will take him to any part of New York—the West Side, through the Riverside Drive district, through the northern limits of the city at Van Cortland Park or Bronx Park, or to the Wall Street section and to Brooklyn. No other station in the world can be reached so easily and quickly and in so many ways for a five-cent fare.

CONVENIENCES FOR TRAVELLERS

In a thousand and one ways the new Grand Central is going to be of enormous use to even the casual traveller. For instance, there will be a lot of little dressing rooms. These will be rented for a nominal sum and a man can go into one of them and change into his dress clothes without hiring a room in a hotel. For women the same facilities are to be offered. There will be dressing rooms for them, too. In these they can change their travelling gowns for more elaborate costumes. There is to be a rest room with medical attendance. This will be centrally placed so that a person can be taken or can go there conveniently and by many different ways. There will be no lack of nurses for those taken suddenly ill, and if necessary a sufferer can be carried out to an ambulance without being seen by other people.

In the matter of baggage disposal, it is safe to say that no terminal in the world will have better arranged facilities, not even the Gare d'Orsay in Paris, where the baggage is almost entirely handled by machinery. The whole fourth level of the station will be devoted to the baggage subways, through which the trunks and bags of passengers can be taken to the transfer station or direct to the outward bound trains. The passenger need have no thought of his incumbrances once he has got his ticket or surrendered his check. When he buys his ticket, he passes on to the next counter, from which check and tickets are sent by pneumatic tube to the baggage room and returned after checking by the same means. This new system has been in operation in the temporary Lexington Avenue terminal for some time.

The New York Central designates many of its trains by specific names as well as by numbers. This, also, is to help the passengers. A train which is not named, but only numbered seldom sticks in the minds of travellers. The Twentieth Century Limited, the New Yorker, the Empire State Express, and a dozen other famous trains are examples of this. Consequently, it has been determined to carry out the policy of naming trains to a still greater extent than is now in force—all with the purpose of simplifying the travellers task of getting from place to place, in and out of stations, at as little trouble as possible to himself.

NO ALUM, NO LIME PHOSPHATE

The railroad's experts have spent years in studying the various questions mingled together in the construction of this huge gateway for the millions. The problem that they have been solving has been to build a terminal so that any man who has never been in New York before, never been outside of his little home town in the Middle West, perhaps, will find no difficulty, will feel no sense of insecurity or bewilderment, in getting from his incoming train to his ultimate destination, no matter where that may be. All he will have to do will be to follow the crowd and ask a question if he is in doubt.

SOME STATISTICS

To those who like figures, the following statistics will be of interest. The total area of the old terminal was 23 acres; that of the new will be 70 acres, or an increase of about 230 per cent. The old terminal had a capacity of 366 cars; the capacity of the new will be 1,149 cars.

The station building proper will be 600 feet on the street level, 300 feet wide and 105 feet high. Below the street level it will be 745 feet long, 480 feet wide and 45 feet deep. 85,000 tons of steel will be used in the construction of the new terminal.

The main concourse will be entered from 42nd. It will be 120 feet wide and 100 feet high. The floor level will be about 10 feet below the grade of 42nd street. It connects only with out-bound trains. The arriving concourse will be on the easterly side of the building. On the suburban track level will be another concourse. Each will have independent exits and entrances.

LOOKING FORWARD

It is probable that several magnificent hotels will form a part of the group of monumental buildings that will rise above the tracks adjacent to the terminal. If the traveller decides to stop at any of these, or at some other near by, he will be able to pass directly thither without going into the street at all or climbing any steps. His baggage will be whisked underground and will reach his room almost as quickly as he will.

It is impossible to say how long this huge terminal is likely to meet the situation. The old Grand Central, which was thought sufficient for a hundred years, was outgrown in less than 40. To-day New York has a population of nearly 5,000,000. Young men of to-day may live to see it a city of 15,000,000. The rest of the country is growing apace. All this means that year by year more and more millions of people will pass through this gigantic gateway that we have been building. No man can say when the day will come that they will begin to crowd and jostle each other in passing and yet a bigger gateway will have to be built.

THE THEATRE OF GREAT EVENTS

The Grand Central of the future will be like its predecessor what its name implies: A great centre of the city's life. It will be the theatre of historical events. The old structure which is now so more is rich in its memories. The old Grand Central has welcomed every President of the United States since it was built. Hardly a foreign dignitary has visited this country who has not passed through its portals. It has been the centre of distribution of every great celebration that the City of New York has known for two score years.

There is no place in the world where the human currents meet and cross and mingle in such volume as at the Grand Central. It is one of the great crossroads of the world. It is safe to say that if a man should wait there long enough he would be pretty sure to meet everyone he knew and to see every famous personage in North America. It is like the gateway of one of the ancient walled cities—everyone, from one end of the land to the other, passes through it sooner or later.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES

To those who have the care of books and the purveying of literature to the public one thought must continually be borne in on the mind, viz., the trend of taste in their clients and the varied degrees of appetite to be found amongst them. In this city there is really quite a high grade taste for whatever is best and most wholesome, and in an age that is notable for the arrant trash of much of the so-called 'literary' output this is not only a surprising, but a pleasing, feature. There are a considerable number, both of adults and juveniles, who have developed quite a wonderful appetite for reading, since the library opened, and it is to the juveniles especially, that a word of warning seems necessary, for, no matter how healthy and inspiring the class of literature may be which they favour there is not the least doubt but that too much addiction to reading is bad for the brain and the body. Old Jeremy Collier said long ago "A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating as by always reading. Too much overcharges Nature and turns more into disease than nourishment. Tis thought and digestion which makes books serviceable and gives health and vigour to the mind." If the parents of those few boys and girls who manage to swallow the contents of three or four novels a week realized the utter uselessness of the process and the hurtfulness of it they would probably make a strenuous effort to curtail the meals of their offspring.

To Turn to Another Matter.

With a view to preserving something of continuity in the numbering of the books on the shelves so that the public may at least have a clue to the whereabouts of any volume they may be in search of, the Librarian asks all who make use of the library to make a point of turning down every book that they handle on the shelves. By doing this it can be seen at a glance what book has been handled.

"THE KISSING GIRL"

On Thursday, April 27th at the Grand Opera House, will be presented a musical comedy of great strength, entitled "The Kissing Girl," by Stanislaus Stange. Both author and composer have much to their credit. Mr. Stange has supplied the widely divergent cleverness of Lulu Glaser, Lillian Russell, Fritzi Scheff and Mme. Schuman-Heink with books and lyrics that proved successful. Mr. Von Tilzer has caught popular fancy in a set of jingles, with here and there compositions of sterling merit and have pleased the best of musical intellect. It is a combination of talent that should bring forward a lighter musical work of much excellence. The Cort Theatre Company promise a production of surpassing beauty, with the entire original production as used in the Chicago presentation of the play during its long run there. In the selection of principals for "The Kissing Girl," they have shown great discrimination, for the locale of the opera's romance lies on the boundary line of Austria and Bohemia which calls for adroit dialect interpretations. The title role will go to Texas Guinan with Dan Whiffin as a comedy foil. For the tenor Mr. Louis London has been selected. Mr. Harry Hermson will have the principal comedy, Miss Venita Fitzhugh will pair with Mr. London in the romantic numbers. The eccentric comedy women will be Ida Fithugh, a comedienne of remarkable force. Much care has been bestowed on the mounting of the piece. An elaborate set of costumes has been designed by Schoultz of great brilliancy. The production has been under the personal supervision of Mr. Stange, assisted by Mr. Geo. Jones, a master of dance. The seat sale will open Tuesday morning.

FIRST STEP IS PASSED

Reciprocity Bill Goes Through the United States Lower House—The Vote was 265 to 89 in Favour of Measure

ALL HAD A CHANCE

Washington, April 22.—President Taft's Canadian reciprocity agreement, supported by all but a handful of Democrats, and opposed by a majority of the Republicans, passed the House of Representatives early last evening by 265 to 89. With nearly 200 Democrats in control and their action endorsed by a large body of the Republicans, the bill to put the agreement in force was adopted with no amendments and is almost identically the form in which it passed the House in the last session of the preceding Congress.

The bill seeks to put into effect the formal agreement reached between President Taft and the members of the Canadian Cabinet for a reduction of the tariff rates on many articles and free trade in many others across the Canadian border. Added to it by the Democratic leaders is a section which "authorizes and requests" President Taft to make further efforts to secure still freer trade relations with Canada, in the form of additional reciprocal relations.

The passage of the bill marked the closing fight that had raged in the House for six days. During that time the outcome of the measure was at no time threatened, but the Democratic and Republican leaders working for its passage conceded all the opportunity desired by its opponents for debate, and following the same policy, amendments were admitted in the House, yesterday for almost every section of the bill, and in each case they were rejected by an overwhelming vote given by the friends of the measure on both sides of the House, on the theory that any amendment would nullify it.

Ten Democrats voted against the bill on its passage, while 197 Democrats voted for it. As in the case when the bill passed at the preceding session of Congress, a majority of the Republicans were found against it, the party vote being 67 for and 78 opposed. Representative Berger of Wisconsin, the Socialist member, voted for it, and Representative Adkin of New York, who ranks as an Independent, voted against it.

Did All They Could.

Toronto, April 22.—Strips of sticking plaster upon the person of Raphael Gentile, an Italian, showed the correct map of the attack made upon it Saturday morning last, by Nicholo Ganzano and Teresa Maracotello, his woman, at their home, when he appeared in the Police Court yesterday morning to press charges of aggravated assault.

He said that the husband had struck him with a hammer, while the woman had beaten him with an axe, shot at him with a revolver, and sprinkled ashes upon him. The woman said that she had decorated him with ashes, but denied the rest. She said that clothed in three pairs of trousers, he was making ready to leave without paying his board. The husband said that he had come to the rescue of his wife. They will dwell together in the jail for 40 days.

Demand Their Cargo.

Kingston, April 22.—The schooner Ford cleared for the steamer John Sharples, wrecked off Galloup Islands, to demand her cargo of corn for Jas. Richardson & Sons, to whom it was consigned. On Wednesday the men on the wrecking job refused Capt. Daryeau permission to get the corn off until the vessel was released. Trouble is looked for if the second request is refused.

Accident to Survey Party?

Ottawa, April 22.—Census Commissioner Blue last night received the following wire from his son, Walter Blue, who is on a Government survey in the Temiskaming:

"Saved everything and are all right."

It is believed here that the wire refers to some accident in the north, but nothing is known of it in Ottawa.

Australia's Naval Plan.

London, April 22.—Sir Cyprian Bridge, interviewed re Australia's navy, says the scheme is ambitious and will give the Australian taxpayer the opportunity of realizing the financial burdens imposed on the Empire. The complement of men necessary is fifteen thousand, which for a country like Australia, with a small population, will mean considerable expense.

Farmer Burned Out.

Brockville, Ont., April 22.—Fire destroyed the residence of David Hodge, living a few miles out of Brockville, entailing a loss of over $300. He also lost his entire sugar-making plant. The barns were saved through the efforts of farmers in the neighborhood.

London, April 22.—The Colonial Office has requested the Earl Marshal to inform the office on coronation day at the exact minute of the crown being placed on the King's head, and the news will be flashed to every part of the Empire.

Criticized in House by George Taylor M.P.—Sharpe Gets Mixed up Over the First Item and Sits Down

OBJECT TO TIPS

Ottawa, April 22.—Traveling expenses such as cab hire, Pullman cars, hotel bills and gratuities to waiters on the part of Ministers, Deputy Ministers and Departmental officials formed the chief subject of discussion in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon. Geo. Taylor (Leeds) took up a return recently tabled and in lacrymose tones inveighed against wanton expenditures.

"By what right," he demanded, "did these officials put their hands into the public chest and give tips to waiters."

Mr. Taylor objected to private cars for the commissioners of the national transcontinental railway. He criticized the expenses of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and hinted at sundry items which might be classified as "incidentals."

Taking up the bulky return Mr. Taylor began to read Militia Department "300 just even; not $300, and out of this tips to waiters $285.20."

"Are the names of the persons tipped given?" naively asked Mr. Foster.

"No, no," replied Mr. Taylor, somewhat disconcerted by the interruption. Continuing Mr. Taylor read over the expenses of the Governor-General's and Privy Council office, $5,305; Hon. Charles Murphy, $500 tips; Department of Finance, $53 tips; Trade and Commerce Department, $183.08; Labor Department, $35.20; Railway Commission, expenses of car Acadia, $7,719; tips, $607.50.

The member for Leeds was particularly severe on the commissioners of the national transcontinental railway "traveling expenses," he snorted, "of $7,764." "These men are the pets of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister."

"Hate & Co., for stocking private car, $2,093," said Mr. Taylor, "and $1,500 of it for liquor," referring to a particular item as "$200 simply for lush."

"I wonder if my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will justify that to the farmers of the west?"

The Minister of Marine was the next victim. L. P. Brodeur, $4,828.28; cabs, $218; hotel bills, $676; Pullman cars, $95; tips, $100. Mr. Taylor then went on to show that the Minister and officials of the Marine Department had paid out in tips during the year something like $800. Sir Alan Aylesworth, for personal expenses, spent $2,945, and Hon. Wm. Paterson was at the bottom of the list with but $40 against his name. "There was nothing paid out for tips," said Mr. Taylor, amid laughter.

"He beats his way," came from a back bencher.

Sir Alan Aylesworth resented Mr. Taylor's remarks. For fifteen years before he had come into the House, he had been traveling at the instance of other people, and generally charged for what he had actually spent. When in London two summers ago, the period covered by the return, he had been absent from Ottawa 150 days, and during that time his expenses had been within the usual allowance granted to Departmental officials. "I certainly lived no differently when abroad on Government business than I do when abroad on my own pleasure," he remarked with some feeling.

Sam Sharpe (N. Ontario) continued the discussion and got badly mixed up over an item in the Department of the Interior for $45 respecting whisky cases. This was a nice situation he suggested with some show of sarcasm, but Hon. Wm. Pugsley, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Oliver, directed the attention of Mr. Sharpe to the fact that this was for legal expenses in connection with certain prosecutions of persons who sold liquor in the dry belt on both sides of the transcontinental railway during construction.

Several of the members of the Government spoke briefly in explanation of the figures quoted by Mr. Taylor, and all announced their readiness to have all matters gone into thoroughly.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, referring to the total expenses quoted for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, pointed out that they applied to the international and trans-oceanic peregrinations of trade commissioners and inspectors. The actual expenses of the Minister and staff were moderate and economical.

The reciprocity debate was resumed and Messrs. Beauparlant (St. Hyacinthe) and Wright (Muskoka) and Dr. Chisholm (E. Huron) spoke.

Every lady is interested in hair dressing styles because a becoming and effective coiffure adds much to her personal appearance. Individual attractiveness is very largely dependent upon the hair. Therefore, we say "Take care of the hair". A few moments each day devoted to brushing the hair, massaging the scalp and an application of Newbro's Herpicide from two to four times each week will accomplish truly wonderful results.

HERPICIDE

IS A MOST EXQUISITE AND DELIGHTFUL HAIRDRESSING

Hair that is neglected shows it and quickly. It is uneven, dull, brittle and the scalp usually infested with dandruff. Hair in this condition is unsightly and cannot be made to look neat, no matter how carefully arranged. The above simple suggestions relative to the care of the hair will, if followed, correct all of this.

The hair takes on an astonishing luxuriance and beauty which are always associated with the use of this wonderful scalp prophylactic. With the removal of dandruff and the restoration of a healthy condition of the hair and scalp, the hair ceases to fall out and nature asserts herself in a manner which is almost at once noticeable. Try it and see.

Back View

Newbro's Herpicide destroys the invisible microbic growth which causes dandruff, and keeps the head clean. Newbro's Herpicide was the first preparation made to kill the dandruff germ. It has for years been known as "The Original Dandruff Germ Destroyer."

Any preparation for which the same claims are made is trading upon the reputation of Newbro's Herpicide and is an imitation. Don't take something "just as good." Insist on having genuine Herpicide.

MARTIN TO THE FRONT.

Joseph Attacks Unionists In British House.

London, April 22.—In the Commons Thursday night Joe Martin, M.P., referring to reciprocity, said a savage attack was being made by members of the Opposition on Hon. James Bryce, and the Government because they would not bring pressure to bear on the United States and Canada not to enter into such a treaty. (Opposition cries of dissent, "withdraw").

Steel-Maitland asked for the ruling of the Speaker whether the member was justified in attributing to the members of the Opposition statements which had never been made by them which he challenged the member to prove. (Opposition cheers.)

The Speaker said in any case this had nothing whatever to do with the motion.

Martin said the member for Leicester had devoted his speech almost entirely to the question of Imperial federation.

The Speaker said that was not so, as the greater part of the speech was directed to the resolution, and had not dealt with the question of imperial federation.

Martin said of course he bowed at once to the Speaker's ruling, but he had ears. ("Oh, oh" and laughter.) In conclusion, he gave his opinion that the resolution and all these speeches about imperial unity were most mischievous, as at present we had an ideal state of things, and the ties which bound the Dominions to the mother required no strengthening.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

Ten hotel licenses were cut off at Hamilton.

The Toronto Board of Trade will send a petition to Ottawa asking for improved Dominion Government buildings in that city.

Four children of Station Master Otis Dunn of the C.P.R. at Kaladar, died of scarlet fever. Six other members of the family are very ill with the disease.

F. Linton, who was choked to death on Thursday night while traveling through Maine on a C.P.R. train, is now believed to be a Toronto man. Linton was eating when death occurred.

Minister of Labor King has telegraphed Rev. Dr. W. C. Gordon of Winnipeg, popularly known as "Ralph Connor," appointing him chairman of the western miners' conciliation board.

Dr. B. C. Borden, who for many years was principal of Mount Allison Ladies' College, Sackville, N.B., has been appointed president of the Mount Allison University, in succession to Dr. David Allison, who resigned a year ago.

A Peculiar Fatality.

Three Rivers, Que., April 22.—C. E. Hoole, aged 14 years, while looking at other boys playing baseball at the Christian Brothers' school Wednesday afternoon, was struck on the head with the ball. At the same time, in trying to avoid the ball, he also knocked his head against the wall of the school, and as a result he was injured so badly that he died Thursday night.

Another Chinese Loan?

St. Petersburg, April 22.—The Novoe Vremya devotes its leading editorial article yesterday to the international loan of $50,000,000 to China. The article deals particularly with the attachment of Manchurian revenues and the appointment of a fraction of the loan to Manchurian enterprises. In connection with the declarations abroad that the loan will serve to guarantee the territorial integrity of China, the Novoe Vremya says that China at present has a deficit of 80,000 roubles (about $40,000,000) and that undoubtedly the loan will be swallowed up by pressing immediate needs and that a further loan will be inevitable.

It says that the French and British participants in the loan stipulate that no part of it shall be employed in military expenditures in Manchuria, and that as long as this stipulation is observed Russia has no particular objection to the loan.

Capt. Guest Unopposed.

London, April 22.—Capt. Guest, Liberal, was unopposed in the East Dorset bye-election.

Capt. Guest was elected in December and unseated in January on a petition alleging corrupt practices. His vote was 6,819; his opponent, Glyn, 6,298.

We Would Like to Meet You

If you are interested in any way in Western Canada, we would like to make your acquaintance. We have had a wide experience in the West, and besides we have a very large list of Farm Lands in the best sections of Saskatchewan for sale. Come and look our propositions over, we won't importune you to buy, and you will receive a hearty welcome. In Fairhaven we have without doubt the finest investment proposition in Western Canada, and at the prices asked, $100, $115 and $125 a lot, with the low cash payments of only $20 down and $10 a month, with no interest and no taxes, it will surprise us if we have any lots left in a week or two.

FAIRHAVEN

Fairhaven is most beautifully situated, high and dry, making an ideal location for a choice residential section.

In a city of such splendid promise as Saskatoon, real estate advances very rapidly in value. Land which sold a few years ago for from $10 to $15 an acre is now selling for many hundreds of dollars a front foot. Second Avenue property, which 10 years ago, was a drug on the market at $45 a lot, is now selling as high as $1500 a front foot. Can you realize what this phenomenal rise in values means to those who were lucky enough, who had the nerve, to invest a few hundred dollars in Saskatoon ten, or even five, years ago? You have a better opportunity to-day than they had then, for while they were gambling with chance, you are only grasping a certainty.

$100, $115, $125 a Lot

Mr. Investor

Are you open to investigate a proposition for investing your money in the most progressive city in the Canadian West?

SASKATOON

has grown from a hamlet of 113 people, in 1903, to an up-to-date, progressive city of 16,000 in 1910.

In 1903 Saskatoon had a single one-horse railroad, over which a solitary, forlorn-looking train crawled its way each day. Now, after only seven short years, what a difference! To-day NINE different railway outlets are operating into Saskatoon, and over TWENTY splendidly equipped passenger trains enter its three passenger stations each day.

Saskatoon, during the seven years, 1903-1910, led all the west with percentage of population increase. In fact, its per cent. increase of population was greater than the per cent. increase of all other Western Canadian cities combined.

In such a virile, fast-growing city, MR. INVESTOR, don't you think you would be making a great mistake if you were to pass up this great opportunity to realize greatly on this unprecedented ratio of growth? We present for your consideration FAIRHAVEN subdivision, one of the choicest properties in the whole of Saskatoon. It is situated on the west side of the city, where the greatest development is taking place. It is just west of St. Paul's Hospital, which is maintained by the Grey Nuns, and which is one of the finest institutions in the West.

It is but a mile from the manufacturing and industrial centre of the city, being just half a mile from the city's limits. It is a safe bet that this property will double and treble in value during the next year or 18 months.

The 1911 Ferro Is the Engine You Will Like Best

Carburetion and Ignition, the two things on which internal combustion engines depend for efficiency, greatly improved in 1911 Ferro Engines. These engines have been correct in principle since their introduction, and with added efficiency due to 1911 improvements, the Ferro is the most perfect marine motor of the time. Before you buy

See The FERRO

The 1911 Improved Ferro Carburetor, working in unison with the timer, mixes just the proper proportions of gasolene and air. This gives an easy starting, quick responding motor of great power, and overcomes certain annoyances heretofore encountered with carburetors.

High Tension Ignition can also be had in 1911 Ferro Engines. This form of ignition is proven best by its performance on the leading automobiles.

A FEW POINTS OF INTEREST ABOUT THE HARDING 20

(As found in other cars) the 12 connections on the 6 batteries, 4 connections on the vibrator box, the 4 vibrators and the 4 connections on the commutator, making 24 points that have always been a trouble to car owner s,by some of these connections becoming loose, or the platinum points burning out on the vibrator springs. These sources of trouble, in addition to the wiring from all these points, have all been done away with in th Harding 20, and the timing and firing is now direct from the magnets to the cylinders. The handhole plates on the side of the engine housing gives easy access to the interior working parts of the engine. The driving gear and clutch are all coupled to the engine in one housing and running in a bath of oil-making the whole mechanism a one unit plant. All these improvements have simplified the running and the care of the Harding 20 to such an extent that it makes the car quite as easy for a woman to run, as well as a left foot, and the brakes under the left foot, and hte brakes under the right; the throttle lever on the steering wheel, which speeds the car at from 3 to 40 miles an hour. In the event of anything appearing in front of you suddenly, by simply pressing on both foot pedals the action releases the clutch and puts on the brakes, bringing the car to a stop eve within the length of itself. The Harding 20 is easy to run, simple to take care of, with very little expense compared with large cars. Railway for Hayti.

Cape Haytien, April 22.—The S. S. Sarnia arrived here yesterday with a party of civil engineers and construction equipment and transport mules, which will be used in building the railroad, a concession for which was recently given to an American syndicate, headed by James P. Macdonald of New York. According to the terms of the contract the syndicate secures large areas of public lands and the right to run a line of steamships between Cape Haytien and foreign ports. The Government gives the syndicate an interest in the fruit concessions of the island.

Tried to Burn Church.

Wyoming, Ont., April 22.—An attempt to burn the Methodist Church here was discovered at 12.30 yesterday morning. The wooden steps in front of the church were destroyed and the flames had spread to the building proper before they were extinguished. There is no clue as to who the guilty one is. A pile of oil-soaked waste was found near the wooden steps.

Missionaries For the West.

London, April 22.—A party of young English missionaries sent out by the Colonial Continental Church Society, sailed from Liverpool yesterday for Canada. The majority will find spheres of missionary labor among settlers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The party is the first of several to be sent out this spring and summer.

ASK SUPERANNUATION.

Civil Servants Wait on Minister of Finance.

Ottawa, April 22.—A deputation of civil servants from every part of the Dominion waited on the Minister of Finance yesterday morning, and asked for the abolition of the existing retiring fund and the introduction of a system of superannuation similar to that adopted by Canadian banks and insurance companies.

The Finance Minister promised favorable consideration.

Officers were elected at the concluding session of the delegates from the civil service of Canada yesterday.

The new officers are: Dr. J. A. Smith of the Windsor custom house, re-elected president; G. Carpenter of the Montreal postoffice, vice-president; R. H. Coats of the Labor Department, Ottawa, secretary-treasurer; Hon. J. F. Wheat of the Charlottetown postoffice, Hon. A. T. Dunn of the St. John, N.B., customs, N. Dyer of the Halifax postoffice, J. Z. Corbeil of the Montreal customs, T. M. Lane of the Montreal excise office, R. Pateling of the Interior Department at Ottawa, M. Sparks of the Toronto postoffice, W. F. Miller of the excise office at Hamilton, A. Brown of the Vancouver customs, and R. Holmes of the customs, executive committee.

The work for the ensuing year was mapped out, among the subjects with which the association will deal being the education of the public in favor of superannuation and the extension of the act of 1908.

No Action In Church Union.

Zurich, Oct. 22.—No action regarding church union was taken at yesterday's session of the Evangelical Conference. The matter was brought up when Rev. T. A. Moore, secretary of the Methodist General Conference was introduced to the meeting and spoke on the resolution passed by the Methodist body.

The conference decided to hold its next annual session at Campden, Ont., the third Thursday in April. Rev. A. Y. Haist resigned as presiding elder on account of illness. Rev. S. R. Knechtel was elected on the second ballot. The presiding elders were stationed as follows: Northwest district, Rev. L. H. Wagner; north district, Rev. J. C. Little; east district, Rev. S. R. Knechtel.

No Strap-Hangers.

Minneapolis, Minn., April 22.—Judge C. A. Willard of the Federal District Court yesterday denied the injunction applied for by the local street car company to restrain the City of Minneapolis from enforcing its recently-passed "strap-hanger" ordinance. The ordinance provides that street cars shall not take on passengers after all the seats are filled and others are standing equal to 25 per cent. of the seating capacity of the car.

The court refused the company's contention that the rule deprived the company of property without due process of law. He said the ordinance was not drastic enough, as it permitted crowding of cars when more than 300 feet apart.

Seeking Jail Site.

Toronto, April 22.—Prospects are that Toronto will soon have a jail farm. There has been some delay in getting the scheme into operation because, until the recent legislation was secured, the city had no power to go outside of the city to expropriate land for the purpose. Now that this power has been granted, a site will be secured as soon as possible.

It is understood that there are several sites available. Ald. O'Neill, chairman of the property committee, and Property Commissioner Harris have looked over several, and are expected to make a recommendation to the property committee in the near future.

Promised Co-operation.

London, April 22.—The council of the London Chamber of Commerce last night passed a resolution to accede to the request of the New York Chamber of Commerce to co-operate with it to bring about a treaty of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States as proposed by President Taft.

Canadians at Columbia.

New York, April 22.—Two Canadians figured in the fellowship awards made for the academic year at Columbia University: S. M. Eastman, Medford, Ont., secures the George William Curtiss' Fellowship, and J. C. Miller, Calgary, Alberta, is a fellow in the Teachers' College in education.

May Be Open Sunday.

Hull, Que., April 22.—Hull moving picture theatres will be allowed to give Sunday performances in future. The long-delayed judgment in the case of the Provincial Government against the Hull moving picture theatres, to compel them to close on the Sabbath, was delivered in the Police Court yesterday by Magistrate Goyette, who decided in favor of the theatres and dismissed the case.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, April 22.—The foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat was quieter and no bids received, no further advances higher exporters found it impossible to do any further business at a profit. In sympathy with the continued strong upward tendency of prices for cash in the Winnipeg market the local feeling was strong and prices scored a further advance of ½c per bushel, but volume of business is small. American No. 2 yellow corn is 1½c to 1d per bushel higher. There was an active demand from New York houses for spring wheat flour and a sale of 25,000 barrels was made at an advance in prices of 10c per barrel over the figure accepted yesterday and the same price was bid for other round lots and refused. There was also a fair enquiry from foreign buyers, but the bids were all out of line with millers' views.

Young, But Wise.

—In a school in a Western Ontario town is a little girl who has not taken quickly to the mysteries of addition. "One 'n one?" asked the teacher, while putting the class through the easiest of the addition tables. The little girl referred to was the only person in the class who couldn't give the answer. "Two 'n one?" asked the teacher. The little girl smiled, confidently, put up her hand and when noticed by the teacher, said: "Shoe polish."—From Toronto Canadian Courier.

WOLVES AND BIG GAME

Increasing in the Mountains of Manitoba as Well as in Ontario

As in Ontario, so likewise in Manitoba, the wolves are said to be increasing in numbers, and a writer who has had recent experience in the Riding Mountains reserve in that Province reports as follows:

It is stated by those who know that the wolves are increasing in the mountains, the comparatively small pack which used to range in the neighborhood of Lake Audy, and in the valleys of Ranch Creek, having increased rapidly until it now numbers something over twenty-five, a band of eighteen having been seen recently. The full-mouthed, nerve-shaking music of the pack can be heard on the clear moonlight nights, and that they play havoc, not only with the calves, but with the fuller-grown elk, is evident from an incident in the early part of the season.

Two men were ranging the woods in the neighborhood of a gully one day, when a full-grown elk crashed through the bushed in panic-stricken flight, and vanished in the heavy timber beyond. A few moments later, one of the hunters, chancing to look in the direction from which the animal had appeared, beheld a huge black head, with fearless eyes and heavy jaws, staring at him through the bushes. It vanished as silently as it had appeared. The man followed to the gully.

As he waited for a few minutes, there suddenly rose from the opposite side of the hollow the heavy, shattering howl of a timber wolf, which was answered almost immediately by another further up. Then, as he watched there came forth from the brush which fringed the gully, three great brutes, two black and the other grey, and they commenced to nose along the brow of the hill. Finally coming upon the track of the deer, which they followed coming on down the gully, one behind the other, toward the waiting man. When they were within fifty yards of him, he let drive, and the foremost fell kicking in the snow, the others coming on fearlessly for a few yards, and then ducking into the under-brush. The fallen animal, which had a broken back and which was attempting silently to trail himself up the side of the gully with his front legs, was speedily put out of his misery, and no more was seen of the others.

INDIGENT STUDENTS

A Large Summer Hotel Seeks to Employ Them as Waiters

Much comment has been aroused in University circles in England and on the Continent by a notice which has been posted up in the university hall by the Academical Society, Buda Pest, for assisting indigent students. The notice in question is an advertisement by the proprietress of a large summer hotel offering a salary of $40 a month each to a number of students who would undertake to act as waiters at the establishment during the holidays. Several young men obtained the posts, but the university authorities, after reconsidering the matter, came to the conclusion that a waiter's calling is altogether out of keeping with a university course. An address on the subject is therefore to be given by the dean of the university, who will attempt to dissuade the students from an undertaking which he cannot, however, prohibit.

VOTE FOR THE BY-LAW BUILD UP PETERBOROUGH

Peterborough wants more factories. Other towns do, too.

They are offering just as good, or better, terms than we are.

All we have got to do now to get a hundred-hand factory, is to say so at the polls to-morrow.

If eighteen hundred people say so, we get the Factory. If they don't it goes to Guelph or Berlin.

Do you want fifty thousand dollars a year more, spent in the town? It so say YES, at the polls.

The by-law means a hundred more houses rented.

It means a hundred mechanics, earning from $3.00 to $5.00 per day.

You have from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. to poll your vote.

By voting early, you will help those who are trying to pass the by-law.

The three-fifths have never turned out before. Some say, it cannot be done.

Let us show these doubters that they are wrong.

By voting against the by-law or not voting at all, you are helping to turn fifty thousand dollars a year away from the City.

Every workman who votes for the by-law helps a hundred workmen to get a job.

The by-law will not increase your taxes, and it will produce fifty-thousand dollars yearly to reduce them.

A vote for the by-law is a boost for the town you live in.

FIFTIETH CATALOGUE

The William English Canoe Company have just received from the Examiner presses their fiftieth annual catalogue, a handsome concise volume full of interesting facts and prices. It was in 1861 that the Wm. English Company presented to the public the first catalogue of canoes and boats. The steady increase of the company from year to year has been strikingly demonstrated. The 1911 catalogue contains some very interesting photographs of Stony Lake scenes, the work of the Roy Studio.

We Go To SPECIALISTS

When we wish to have our teeth treated, do we call on the family physician or a nerve specialist? Not at all, we consult a man in the dental profession who has, by specialization on the organs of digestion and mastication, the proper scientific knowledge and skill to alleviate the sufferings produced by these particular organs. On the other hand, if our nerves are all unstrung and we are nordering on the verge of a nervous collapse, we give little thought to the dental surgeon and consult a specialist on neurosis. We should be just as careful who we have treat our Eyesight. The eyes are one of the most important organs of the body, and should be treated only by a Specialist.

We are Specialists in the correcting of all errors of refraction in the Eye. We do all our own Lens Grinding, thus assuring promptness and positive accuracy.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled."

MONDAY, APRIL 24, 1911

A CANARD WINGED.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster, who has all his public life, especially in opposition, been the preacher of pessimism, of the evangel of gloom, the political Jeremiah, in a speech at Hamilton a few days ago, spoke and prophesied, saying: "If reciprocity is adopted all the United States barnch industries now in your fair city, will be closed and withdrawn." The Fosterian fudge was endorsed by the partizan city council of Hamilton in a moment of south-paw patriotism. Mr. Foster's prophecy had hardly been uttered when it was discredited.

The London Advertiser furnishes the refutation, in stating that "there is a demand for the dredging of the Hamilton harbour in the vicinity of two of these plants—the International Harvester Company's and the Oliver Chilled Plow Company's. The Minister of Public Works told the House of Commons there had been some delay owing to rumours that these concerns would close up if reciprocity were enacted. He had written to both firms for information on the subject, as he did not care to proceed with public work which might not be needed. The replies from both disposed of the anti-reciprocity canard." "Instead of retrenchment," said Mr. Pugsley, "the Oliver Company wrote that they would, under the operation of the reciprocal arrangement, enlarge their plant at Hamilton to a capacity of one thousand plows per day, while both expected, as a further result of the pact, to transfer considerable of their export trade from the United States to Canada."

The city council of Hamilton should be ashamed of its lack of civic patriotism. The same partisan tactics have been followed elsewhere with no more excuse than in Hamilton."

Hoc est, e pluribus, unum, of the multitudinous discredited prophecies that go with the multitudinous deserted policies, abandoned positions and discarded arguments employed by the Conservative opponents of reciprocity within the last three months. The hail of hard fact, is "sweeping away the refuge of lies."

ANOTHER NEEDED CIVIC REFORM.

A ratepayer has complained to the Examiner of conditions that depreciate the value of his property and render comfortable occupation of his premises impossible. These conditions are created by a lot of boys, who, as soon as the spring opens, make this part of the street in question a rendezvous. After schools close at 4 o'clock, they begin to assemble, and engage in football and other games, raising dust, shouting, screaming and making the neighbourhood hideous, by their noise, and the yelping of dogs that accompany them or are kept in the neighbourhood and join in the chorus o fthe boy-bedlam. The state of things makes it impossible for residents in the vicinity to comfortably use their verandahs in hot weather, after the household work is done and rest and open air are the most welcome and enjoyable. The nuisance mentioned is not only a bar to enjoyment, but a positive injury to the value of property. The ratepayer complaining owns a tenement house next his own and opposite the part of the street where the objectionable disturbance is concentrated. He had the house practically leased a few days ago, but the prospective tenant, on visiting the place one afternoon, after four o'clock declared that under no conditions would he live in a house and suffer such annoyance as he there witnessed from the misuse of the streets by the boys. The ratepayer complaining feels that he has a grievance, as in fact he has. He pays high taxes upon a property, whether occupied or vacant—as it promises to be for a long time, under the circumstances. He is entitled to protection and redress.

And he is not the only sufferer from the lack of police protection and supervision. In other parts of the city the boys, large and small, especially in summer, are a terror to residents and householders. Destitute of good breeding and civilised manners, many of the boys, raid, destroy and harry private premises, and, if reproved, "cheek" the reprover as if there was no such thing as respect for elders or private property. This is only an outline picture of conditions that result in loss, annoyance and discomfort to citizens, who claim that they pay taxes enough to have peaceable possession of their homes, about one-third of whose investment and revenue value is claimed by the tax collector every year.

For years there has been demand for police patrolling in the residence sections of the city. If this were provided the nuisance so loudly complained of and so long suffered, would be greatly lessened. Instances are known where the presence of a policeman in uniform, has reduced a street to quiet and good behaviour on the part of otherwise boisterous bad boys. If these boys felt that a policeman might appear at any moment, they would not consider it worth while to organize any mischief and wrong-doing.

Boys will be boys, but they must not be boys in the bad sense, at the expense of people who pay taxes for the sake of enjoying their homes in unmolested peace and reasonable quiet. Making Peterborough a pleasant place to live in is the object of a great deal of effort. Making it an unpleasant place to live in by permitting conditions that do this, is bad economy, bad civic policy.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Ottawa Opposition is hard up for scandals, says the Toronto Star. Sam Sharpe, M.P., undertook to criticize an item of $46 for "whiskey cases," only to find out that the "cases" were prosecutions for illegal selling.

Toronto dogs are attacked with a new disease, closely representing rabies, but believed to be haemorrhage. A good cure for the dog disease in Peterborough would be bleeding—cutting off the tail just behind the ears, of nine-tenths of the mongrels that are not with a $3-dollar tag, especially when they don't wear it.

The Kincardine Review, published by Hugh Clark, M.P.P., asserts that "When a full history of the reciprocity negotiations is made public, it may appear that the Asquith Government had a hand in it." The agreement which Colonel Clark's friends have denounced as "uih-British" engineered by the British Government, just think of it! The number of changes in objection, the opponents of reciprocity are urging, suggests the old problem of the geometrical progression in price of shoeing a horse.—London Advertiser.

MISCHIEF MAKING IMPERIALISTS.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

Joe Martin is right. There is a great deal of most michievous talk going the rounds in England under the guise of Imperialism. The comments of many of the newspapers and politicians are insulting to Canada. They question our motives and place our loyalty under suspicion in order that through us they may hit at the Asquith Government which is daring to interfere with the ancient privileges of the classes.

Because the people in the dominions beyond the seas refuse to let themselves be placed under the heel of Downing street they are accused of lacking in vision, and because the Government in power has sense enough to realize that these young nations must be allowed to work out their own salvation, its members are called "Little Englanders."

As a matter of fact, it is these self-glorified gentlemen who dub themselves "Imperialists" that are the men without vision and the real "Little Englanders." They cannot see, what is patent to every body else, that the quickest way to disrupt the Empire would be to fetter its component parts in the manner they suggest.

As Mr. Martin says, "the ties which bind the dominions to the mother country require no strengthening." They are ties of love and sympathy. The busybodies who would upset that state of affairs, who would curb our national aspirations and make of us "merely colonials" are the worst enemies the Empire has. We need Dreadnoughts to protect us from these enemies within just as much as we need Dreadnoghts to protect us from enemies without.

HASTEN GENTLY.

(Montreal Witness.)

Mr Foster has been telling an audience that the government is grieving that it did not wait a little longer and get for nothing what, under the reciprocity agreement, it has had to pay for. What does this statement mean? It means that the United States tariff has become such a burden to the United States people that the people, not for the sake of getting into our market, but for the sake of enjoying the products of the earth untaxed, would have taken the taxes off any way. That Mr. Foster is entirely right in this view is made abundantly evident by every act and deliverance of the present House of Representatives at Washington. The Democratic majority, if the report presented by its Ways and Means Committee rightly represents it, is minded to add very largely to the free list on Canadian and other foreign products, without, as Mr. Foster says, asking any concessions in return. In this the Democrats undoubtedly represent the will of the people. If, then, it is the imperative demand of the people of the United States to get their necessities untaxed by the protected interests, is it not probable that a similar demand exists in Canada, and that instead of regretting that it had a chance to reduce in some small measure the common people's burdens, the government is congratulating itself that it has achieved what it has done before the demand became too revolutionary? It will be now the care of all successive governments to study how they can take down the protection wall, brick by brick, without having the whole structure come down by the run, and smothering a lot of industries in its downfall.

HOW MORMONISM AND POLYGAMY DIFFER FROM CHRISTIANITY

(Monfreal Witness.)

Father Bernard Vaughan, according to press despatches, has said that the Mormons, who are so zealously propagating their absurd and pernicious doctrines in Great Britain, should 'be 'taken by the scruff of the neck, rubbed across our island and dropped into the sea.' The sentiment is thoroughly in accord with Father Vaughan's style, which is nothing if not extravagant and sensational, but it is just the sort of talk calculated to arouse a spirit of violence which will afford the Mormons the glory of 'martyrdom,' and give the ugly craze a greater vogue than ever. Mormonism would have died of its own absurdities had not many of its early disciples — including women and children — been driven from their homes and maltreated, and its chief priest and founder, Joseph Smith, shot by a mob, many of the members of which were doubtless no better in their lives than the Mormons themselves. Feeling is running so high in England that a mass meeting has been called in London to insist on immediate action. If the Mormons can be restrained by law from their proselytizing work, it may be a good thing. But that can only be done by convicting them of crime, and that is what Mr. Winston Churchill is earnestly investigating. The main defence against their sophisms will, however, be the education of the people as to their methods and the true history and meaning of their system.

Mr. Hans P. Freece, who was born in the Mormon church, but is now lecturing against its propaganda, says that recent press despatches from Utah indicating that at the last general conference of the Mormon church its president, Joseph F. Smith, demanded that polygamy cease, and that future violators of that rule should be punished, are false. They are apparently sent out by Mormon agents, and are in keeping with the Mormon belief that the end justifies the means when the interests of the church are concerned. Colonel Nelson, editor of the Salt Lake 'Tribune,' writing to Mr. Freece, says: 'The despatches sent out 'from here purporting to give a 'declaration or statement of the October conference of the Mormon 'church, relating to polygamy, are 'impostures. There was no delivery 'about polygamy from the October 'conference, nor was any allusion 'made to polygamy by any of the 'speakers.' The Salt Lake 'Tribune,' moreover, published the names of more than two hundred men who have gone into new polygamy since it was 'abolished' by the church. Not one protest was made, and not one libel suit was brought, or even threatened, as would certainly have occurred had any of those accused been guiltless. The precious president, Joseph F. Smith himself, and Apostle Lyman, who is the heir apparent to the office of president and prophet, have both acknowledged living in the polygamous relation since 1809, when the manifesto abolishing polygamy was given to the 'church.'

The Rev. A. M. Gordon, of Lethbridge, who has worked among the Mormons in connection with the home missions of the Presbyterian church, says: 'Undoubtedly some 'polygamy is practiced in Canada. But 'polygamy is notoriously difficult to 'prove in a court of law. The second 'woman in a household is always 'the wife's cousin, or a friend on a 'visit, or her presence is explained in 'some other way. Indeed, the police 'and the judges say that it is almost 'impossible to convict a Mormon of 'any crime on evidence furnished by 'Mormons. If he can help it, a Mormon will never give evidence against 'a fellow-Mormon. The Mormons may 'dispute among themselves, but when 'non-Mormons, or, as they call them, 'Gentiles, are concerned, they will 'stand by each other through thick 'and thin.' Like other Gentiles who have moved amongst them he did not find the Mormon people in a true sense neighbourly. All non-Mormon people made him as welcome as if he were a minister or priest of their own communion, but he was never invited to a Mormon home. 'Though seemingly cordial enough, they hold the 'Gentiles' at arm's length; they are 'enclosed within their own fortifications, they talk to the outsider across 'a moat; and the drawbridge is always up.' Regarding the much lauded value of the Mormons as settlers, he says that though, after a couple of years of Mormon occupation, virgin land will be further advanced than if taken by the ordinary immigrant, after ten years or more neither land nor people will be in as good shape as in a district where all the people are 'Gentiles.' If there be any 'Mormon menace,' he believes that it comes from two facts: 'First, that many, not 'all, of the Mormons hold in theory 'to polygamy, and would welcome the 'opportunity to practice it; second, 'that the Mormons are controlled by 'their leaders, and in case of questions affecting their church would 'vote solid as these leaders bade them 'vote.'

These statements regarding the Mormons, made not by a sensationalist but by a temperate observer, picture them as a somewhat disagreeable and possibly dangerous element in our cosmopolitan Northwest. Politicians who have frequently attacked the Doukhobors have, however, strange to say, been silent regarding the Mormons. Indeed, the politicians defend them. The difference is no doubt because they use their votes. Another thing is certain :The setting forth of their cult by missionaries in terms that imply that it is a form of Christianity little different from that of any other sects is a fraud. Christianity teaches of an infinite, eternal and perfect God and Father, above all, through all and in all, in whom 'we live and move and have our being.' Mormonism teaches that 'there is no other God in heaven, but that God who has flesh and bones.' He is simply a big man and is as full of fleshly desires and deeds as the corrupt gods of paganism. Christianity tells of a spotless and perfect Saviour. Mormonism blasphemously pictures Jesus as a polygamist. Christianity uplifts woman. Mormonism despises and degrades her. Christianity teaches absolute truthfulness. Mormonism has flourished by perjury and falsehood. Christianity teaches the universal brotherhood of man. Mormonism, in practice anyhow, has exclusive regard for the 'saints.' One of the greatest weapons against the ignorance in which Mormonism was born and among which it has always chiefly spread, will be the furthering of education and of true religion among our composite peoples. When the light comes in, the queer and corrupt things which flourish in darkness will rapidly disappear.

THE HOUSE OF A THOUSAND CANDLES.

'The House of a Thousand Candles' a dramatization of Meredith Nicholson's famous novel of the same name, was presented at the Grand at matinee and evening performances on Saturday to small, but appreciative audiences. The play, containing the same elements of mystery that made the book so fascinating, was novel in plot and staging, and the result was a very pleasing presentation. It was interpreted by a capable company of which Wayne Lyter, in the role of Bates, the faithful butler, carried off the chief honours. Miss Rosabelle Leslie's work, as Marion Devereaux, was very acceptable. The scenic investure was unusually complete

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

"We shan't miss it!" cried Velasco. "I have the tickets, the passports for you and for me! Here — to the left! The doors are still open!"

An official rushed forward and took the valise from Velasco's hand: "Here, sir—here! First class compartment!"

Velasco nodded breathlessly, and the two sank down on the crimson cushions; the door slammed. "Ye his wife. "Ye gods!" he laughed again.

"Why are you trembling?" he said. "We are safe now. I told you I had the passports. Are you cold, or afraid?—You shake like a leaf!"

The girl put out her hand, touching his. "Did you see?" she breathed. "There—on the platform—Boris, the Chief of the Third Section!—He was watching!"

Velasco laughed again aloud, happily, like a boy. "What of it? Let him watch! Put up your veil, Kaya. Great heavens, what a night it has been! My heart is going still like a hammer—is yours? Lean back on the cushions—put up your veil. Let me see you once,—let me see you! Look at me as you did in the Theatre—Kaya! Don't tremble".

"He is there," breathed the girl, "I see him behind the curtain! He is talking to the official—The train is late and it doesn't start. Why doesn't it start?"

She gave a little moan and peered out through the veil: "Something has happened, Monsieur! The officials are clustered together, talking—there is some excitement! They are gesticulating and several are pointing to the train! What is it—what is it?"

Velasco laughed again; but the laugh died in his throat. The two turned and gazed at one another with wide, frightened eyes.

"The Chief of the Third Section—see! He is going from compartment to compartment—He is looking at the passports! He is coming here—here!"

CHAPTER VI.

"Your passports, Monsieur—Madame?"

Velasco thrust his hand slowly into the breast pocket of his coat and drew out the precious papers. His manner was cold and indifferent, and his eyes had narrowed into sleepy slits again beneath the heaviness of his brows.

Kaya was leaning back on the cushions with the veil drawn closely over her face. She was tapping the panels of the door with a dainty, nervous foot. Neither glanced at the official.

The Chief of the Third Section was in evening dress with a fur cloak thrown hastily over his shoulders. He would have passed for an ordinary citizen on his way to a ball if it had not been for the strangeness of such an attire in a railway station, and the cluster of anxious, humble officials bowing and gesticulating about him. The Chief examined the passports closely and at some length; then, he tossed an order over his shoulder in a quick, sharp tone to the group of officials, and one hurried away.

"This lady, Monsieur, she is your wife?"

The voice of the Chief, as he turned to Velasco, was like the passing of a brush over wool. The Violinist shuddered.

"Certainly sir, she is my wife," he returned curtly. "It is so stated on the paper, I believe."

"It is," said the Chief, "The writing is plain, quite clear. Will you be good enough to raise your veil, Madame?"

Kaya shrank back. "My veil!" she stammered. She half rose from her seat, supporting herself, with her hands pressed down on the cushions, gazing up at the waiting official. "No—my veil!—What do you mean?"

"I am sorry to trouble you," said the Chief sharply, "but I said 'your veil.' Kindly raise it at once.—Hat—Why shouldn't you show your face, Madame?"

His burly form filled the doorway ad the white of his shirt front, half screened by the fur, gleamed under the electric light. He seemed enormous.

Velasco's brows lifted suddenly until his eyes were wide open and blazing. "Stand back, you impudent scoundrel!" he cried, "Stand away from my wife! How dare you?"

"Come!" said the Chief. His voice was still sharper. "No nonsense, Monsieur. The veil must be raised and immediately; you are keeping the whole train back. What do you suppose I am here for?" There was menace in his tone as he took a step forward. "Now, Madame, will you raise it, or shall I?"

Kaya retreated slowly to the farther side of the compartment. "Stop," she whispered to Velasco. "Don't get angry; don't do anything, it is useless. Come back in the shadow."

Then she turned and faced the official defiantly, throwing up the veil. Her face was very pale, her eyes were blue and dark, like two pools without a bottom, and her lips pressed together, quivering slightly. Velasco stared at her for a moment, and drew a step nearer, laying his hand on her shoulder. He was trembling with rage.

"Are you satisfied now, you cur?" he cried. "Look at her then. You will never see another face as beautiful, not in the whole length and breadth of your cursed country. Look—while you have the chance! By heaven, whoever you are, chief of the devil himself, I'll report you for this—I'll—

A shrill whistle cut through the torrent of words, and in another moment the Chief had stepped back, an the under officials came crowding through the door of the compartment.

"Arrest them both," cried the Chief shortly. "Get them away at once and don't let them out of your hands. 'Peter and Paul,' quick. The woman is—" He whispered something hoarsely.

In a second the two were surrounded, their hands were chained; they were bound like sheep and dragged, first one, then the other, to a covered sleigh at the rear of the station.

"Put them in—hurry!" cried the Chief. "Gag the fellow; don't let him speak! Is the woman secure, so she can't scream, or moan? Take them off!"

The sleigh started, and the two lay side by side on the floor, jostled by the lurching of the runners, their flesh cut and bruised by the ropes, their mouths parched and panting behind the gags. They could not stir, or moan, or make a sign. They were helpless.

When the sleigh stopped in the grim inner court of the fortress, they were carried out into the darkness, and borne, like animals, through long, damp passages, down innumerable steps and dim windings until finally a door clicked and opened. They were thrust inside, their bindings were cut, and the door clicked again, slamming in its socket with the sickening crash of steel against steel; the sound reverberating hard and metallic like a blow against the ear-drum, finally dying away in the distance, echo upon echo until all was silent.

The girl lay still on the floor where they had left her. She had swooned, and as she returned to consciousness slowly, gradually, her breath came in little gasps through her parted lips and she moaned as she lay. Velasco had dragged himself to his knees, and was peering about him, feeling with his hands in the dim waning light. He was muttering to himself in little outbursts of anger and rebellion, rocking his arms to and fro.

"What a hole! What a beastly place!

The floor is wet; ugh!—The walls are dark and shiny—things are crawling! Good heavens, something ran over my foot!—It must be a rat, scurrying — scampering! Sapristi! There's another! What escrape to be in—what a scrape!"

The girl lifted her head and looked at him, straining her eyes for the outline of his shoulders, the mass of his dark curls. He had turned half away and was wringing his hands, feeling them and exclaiming to himself. She crept towards him and stretched out her hand, touching his shoulder.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

I WANT to tell you of a New Year's, or rather day-after-Christmas resolution, which I made and am actually finding great pleasure in keeping.

Inspired by the day-after-Christmas fatigue and the many-days-after Christmas financial sufferings, I made this resolution — that every month of the year 1911 I will buy or make one Christmas gift.

That means that next Christmas is to find me with eleven of my minor gifts bought and stowed away.

The advantages of this scheme I am already finding are manifold.

For one thing, it gives me an opportunity to take advantage of sales and reasonable prices in general. My January and February purchases were two beautiful pairs of silk stockings which I bought for just half what I should have to pay for them next fall.

My March purchase was some lovely handkerchiefs which I bought at a handkerchief sale very reasonably. All through the year there are sales of one kind or another of which I mean to take advantage.

Again, I do not find an occasional bit of embroidery any tax, whereas the Christmas rush of work makes me fairly hate the sight of a needle. For the April gift I am embroidering a little jabot.

Then again, of course, having the financial strain diffused in this way ought to have a great advantage.

My only fear is that in the affluence of the thought of those eleven gifts safely packed away, I shall feel that I can spend a bit more than my wont upon my other gifts, and thus end in the same dire straits of poverty as usual. I sadly remember one Christmas season, when a week before Christmas I lost a purse containing fourteen dollars just as I was about to make two or three final purchases. The purse fell into the hands of a marvelously honest person—think of it, only a week before Christmas—who sought me out and returned it to me with the dire result that in the exuberance of the spirit and sense of wealth produced by this release from abject poverty, I spent not only the fourteen dollars, but the major part of ten more which was to have tided me over to payday. I have fears of a similar catastrophe, but I am hoping to avoid it by stern reminders to myself of my own bad example.

Not only am I preparing the gifts, but I am even wrapping them up in the customary white swathings and red ribbon. They might look a bit odd, even eric, to anyone who did not understand, but as for me, I'm sure no bride-to-be gets any more delight in peeping into her chest than I do into the shirt-waist box where these Christmast, 1911, gifts are bestowed.

Forgive me for talking so much about myself. You see, I am having so much fun out of the idea that I simply have to pass it along.

"MY BACK IS KILLING ME"

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" WILL CURE

Backache means Congestion of the Kidneys. Dull ache in the back—sharp, shooting pains—headache and nervousness—mean that the Kidneys are overworked. The Bowels are constipated and the skin is inactive, so that the Kidneys are compelled to do the work of both bowels and skin in throwing off the waste of the body. The Kidneys thus become irritated and inflamed and backache results. The only possible way to relieve the congestion and cure the pain is to force the bowels and skin to do their share of the work.

"Fruit-a-tives", the great fruit medicine, is the best and most scientific Kidney Remedy in the world.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Pain in the Back and Kidney Trouble. 50c. box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. Dealers, or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Imitation Cough Cures

Is an Imitation Cough Medicine Good Enough for Your Children?

When you are sick and send for the doctor you don't want him to send a young medical student he has in his office. You would rather have the young fellow experiment on somebody else.

No more do you want imitations of the medicine you know to be of proven value in the cure of disease.

The remarkable success of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in the cure of croup, bronchitis and colds has proven too great a temptation to imitators. They expect you to take chances with their medicines because the price is a few cents less.

Imitations are never sold on merit, but depend on the merit of the article they imitate. You don't want to be experimented on, and for this reason will insist on seeing the portrait and signature of A. W. Chase, M.D., the famous Receipt Book author, on the bottle you buy.

As it is made of simple ingredients of proven value, it is well suited for as a treatment for children. That it is effective in the cure of croup, bronchitis, whooping cough and the most severe coughs and colds is attested by its many years of continued success and enormous sales. 25 cents, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

NOW ITS SASKATOON and in Saskatoon its FAIRHAVEN

$100, $115 & $125 a Lot, $20 Down, $10 Month NO INTEREST & NO TAXES

Mr. Investor

Are you open to investigate a proposition for investing your money in the most progressive city in the Canadian West?

SASKATOON

has grown from a hamlet of 113 people, in 1903, to an up to-date, progressive city of 16,000 in 1910.

In 1903 Saskatoon had a single one-horse railroad, over which a solitary, forlorn-looking train crawled its way each day. Now, after only seven short years, what a difference! To-day NINE different railway outlets are operating into Saskatoon, and over TWENTY splendidly equipped passenger trains enter its three passenger stations each day.

Saskatoon, during the seven years, 1903-1910, led all the west with percentage of population increase. In fact, its per cent. increase of population was greater than the per cent. increase of all other Western Canadian cities combined.

In such a virile, fast-growing city, MR. INVESTOR, don't you think you would be making a great mistake if you were to pass up this great opportunity to realize greatly on this unprecedented ratio of growth? We present for your consideration FAIRHAVEN subdivision, one of the choicest properties in the whole of Saskatoon. It is situated on the west side of the city, where the greatest development is taking place. It is just west of St. Paul's Hospital, which is maintained by the Grey Nuns, and which is one of the finest institutions in the West.

It is but a mile from the manufacturing and industrial centre of the city, being just half a mile from the city's limits. It is a safe bet that this property will double and treble in value during the next year or 18 months.

We Would Like to Meet You

If you are interested in any way in Western Canada, we would like to make your acquaintance. We have had a wide experience in the West, and besides

FAIRHAVEN

we have a very large list of Farm Lands in the best sections of Saskatchewan for sale. Come and look our propositions over, we won't importune you to buy, and you will receive a hearty welcome. In Fairhaven we have without doubt the finest investment proposition in Western Canada, and at the prices asked, $100, $115 and $125 a lot, with the low cash payments of only $20 down and $10 a month, with no interest and no taxes, it will surprise us if we have any lots left in a week or two.

Fairhaven is most beautifully situated, high and dry, making an ideal location for a choice residential section.

In a city of such splendid promise as Saskatoon, real estate advances very rapidly in value. Land which sold a few years ago for from $10 to $15 an acre is now selling for many hundreds of dollars a front foot. Second Avenue property, which 10 years ago, was a drug on the market at $45 a lot, is now selling as high as $1500 a front foot. Can you realize what this phenomenal rise in values means to those who were lucky enough, who had the nerve, to invest a few hundred dollars in Saskatoon ten, or even five, years ago? You have a better opportunity to-day than they had then, for while they were gambling with chance, you are only grasping a certainty.

"MARRIAGE" SUBJECT OF AN INTERESTING SERMON

Rev. W. C. Riddiford Concluded His Special Series of Sermons at Park Street Baptist Church Last Evening ---Final Message in "Love," "Courtship" and "Marriage" Addresses.

At Park Street Baptist church last night Rev. Mr. Riddiford preached the last of his special sermons in the "Love Courtship, and Marrige" series, his topic last evening being "Marriage". There was a large congregation present. Rev. Mr. Riddiford based his remarks on the following text:

" Genises, 2:18—"And the Lord God said: It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him."

An help for man. That is God's appellation of a true woman; as she was conceived by Him, and she came into matchless being from His hands; the acme of God's creative genius.

I have spoken to you of love. I have led you into the paradise of love's court, now in this closing message of this series I wish to speak in a little while about the only reasonable outcome of a real love-match, and its victory—the marriage of two kindred spirits.

Marriage is a God-ordained institution, and the man or woman who wilfully neglects to comply with the call of God, to enter into this most ideal state of earthly existence, if not in my humble judgment, an obedient child of God.

Celibacy is a man-made state, and not of God. It is not the ideal state for man, because it is contrary to all known laws of nature, distasteful to human intuition, and contrary to the mind of God.

Monasteries and nunneries are not, I think, pleasing to God. I may be wrong. Woman was made, if my text be true, (and I believe this old Book from Genesis to Revelation) to be an help to man, and of what help can a pure, noble woman be to any man shut away for life in a nunnery. God bless the noble Sisters of Charity and all other orders of the Roman Catholic Church, or any other church, who devote themselves to the service of others. But God made woman to be an help to man. He made her for motherhood, not maidenhood. He made her to be queen of the home, and not a platform suffragette. He made her to be an help for man ,and not a shut-in, shut-away personification of unapproachable beauty. There may be, and undoubtedly are, cases that may be exceptions to the general rule; but the ideal state of existence, so far as this world is concerned, is marriage.

It must be so, or God would have chosen some other way of bringing His beloved Son into this world, instead of the mysterious way of natural birth.

The Incarnate Christ placed His approval of marriage, both by His birth, and His presence, and also by the many lessons He draws from the marriage laws and customs of His day. He was no Essene.

Why He didn't marry I do not know, but that He believed in, and approved of marriage as the natural outcome of two loving, confiding hearts, I do know. However, we must leave this matter of getting married to the individual, as they deem called of God.

But, having loved a noble, pure woman, and courted her, then I repeat, marriage is the God-ordained outcome, and, unless marriage is the ideal of your courtship, then in Christ's name, do not play false with a confiding woman's affections, for they are woman's all. So, then, you see that marriage is not a forced state, but the natural climax of love's sweet war. It is the continued courtship of two hearts that have really learned to love. One of the sweetest love stories treasured up in modern literary circles is the married love of Robert Browning, the poet, and his wife, the scarcely less famous poetess, Elizabeth Barrett Browning. I think it is Clifford Howard who says that wherever Mrs. Browning trod, whatever she touched, became endeared to her husband with the sacredness of her presence. When Mr. Browning returned with her on a visit to England, after an absence of several years, he repaired to the little church in which they had been married, and there, at the entrance, he reverently kneeled and kissed the paving stones upon which she, the very light of his being, had stepped. And in after years, when the light had gone from his life, he sought this sacred spot on the twelfth of each September, and in the dusk of the evening shadows the passersby might have seen a white-haired man kneeling for a moment, as if in prayer, before the doorway of the dark and silent church.

Marriage has a great refining and moralizing tendency. We are told that nearly all the debauchery and crime are committed by unmarried men, or by those who have wives equal to none, at least to them. There are some in Peterborough and also men who are the cesspools of all the rottenness that makes for the innumerable and immoral diseases in the city. And the more money they have the less is said is said about it.

When a man marries, not too early, and uses prudence in choosing a suitable companion, he is likely to lead a virtuous, happy life. He must choose for himself, and as that good old Scotch proverb has it, "There's but a guide wife in the country, and ilka man thinks he's got her." And so he should. Every man has the right to think he has the best woman in the world, as every woman has a right to think her child the best little baby in the world, and it would be the greatest folly to deny her this right, for she would be sure to take it anyway. Whenever a woman says to me "Don't you think my baby is the prettiest in the world I always say yes, except one. So I kill two birds with one stone. I deny her not her natural pride, nor lay myself open to a heresy-trail when I get home.

The more married men we have the less crime there will be. They tell us there are more single men and women in jail than married ones; and I suppose the married men and women who are in jail, the most of them should have remained single. Look up the police court records the past year in this city alone, and see for yourself.

Marriage renders a man more virtuous and more wise. An unmarried man is but half of a perfect being, and it requires the other half to make things right. God, the Allwise, has said: "It is not good for man to be alone." God makes no mistakes. Marriage changes the current of a man's feelings and gives him a centre for his thoughts, his affections, and acts. If it were intended for man to be single, there would be no harm in remaining so. But since God has decreed "That it is not good for man to be alone, therefore the highest state of life in the world is the married state. And I don't know that it makes any difference who does it, so long as it is performed according to the law of the land, and in accordance with the established rules that govern the uniting of two hearts into one. I would strongly advise every young man to get married. The chances are better by fifty per cent. all through life, in every respect. There is no tear shed for the old bachelor. There is no ready hand and kind heart to cheer him in his loneliness and bereavement. There is none in whose eyes he can see himself reflected, and from whose lips he can receive the unfailing assurances of care and love. He may be courted for his money; he may eat and drink and revel; and he may sicken and die in a hotel or a garret, with plenty of attendants about, like so many cormorants waiting for their prey, but he will never know the comforts of the domestic fireside.

A man who avoids matrimony on account of the cares of wedded life, cuts himself off from a great blessing for fear of a trifling annoyance. He rivals the wiseacre who secured himself against corns by having his legs amputated. My bachelor brother, there cannot, by any possibility, be a home where there is no wife or mother. There is a world of wisdom in these words by some one, whom I do not know: "Every school boy knows that a kite would not fly unless it had a string tying it down." It is just so in married life. The man who is tied down by a half-dozen or more blooming responsibilites, and their mother, will make a higher and stronger fight than the bachelor who, having nothing to keep him steady, is always floundering in the mud. Young man, if you want to ascend in the world, tie yourself to somebody. Who? You know who's who better than I can tell you. If you love a noble, pure woman, get married, and do your best courting after you are married. Marriage is, to a woman, at once the happiest and saddest event of her life; it is the promise of future bliss, raised on the death of all present enjoyment. She quits her home, her parents, her companions. She quits it all for affection, for love's sweet, holy sake. Let no woman get married without first taking into consideration the obligations of the state she is about to enter. Let me say it kindly, but, nevertheless, truly, "that no woman has a right to get married unless she is prepared for the highest and most essential make-up of her God-created and God-ordained being: the sweet, holy state of motherhood. God made woman to be a mother; and the woman who refuses to obey God's law, either by artificial methods, or by breaches of natural law, will, in God's own time reap the reward of such actions. Ah, yes, the sweetest moment in a woman's life is that moment when two tiny hands, as soft as dove's wings, fold themselves about her neck and, in mute silence, whisper through the chambers of her heart but the word, mother.

Oh, there are homes in this city, that are in sad need of these tiny, God-given reformers. But marriage is not merely the mating of two animals. It is the continuous and permanent union of one man and one woman for life. It is not merely a voluntary partnership. It is an estate—an honourable estate, instituted by God in the time of man's innocence. It is the union of two separate persons in one flesh, hand and heart united for one common good. The making of home, sweet home, and a real home contains husband, wife, father, mother, children, with love's banner flowing over all. God meant man's nature and woman's wonderful nature to supplement one another as two parts of one whole. Our Lord himself says: "He who made them from the beginning made them male and female, said: "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, and the twain become one flesh." What, therefore, God hath joined together, let not man, be he Protestant or Priest, put asunder.

And he who, knowingly, marries a divorced woman or man to another while the husband or wife is alive, is a party to adultery, according to the teachings of the new Testament, but divorce is another subject from marriage. Marriage then, from the Creator's holy standpoint, was instituted for three things.

First, it was ordained for the procreation of children, to be brought up in the fear and nurture of the Lord.

Some people pretend to think that it is indelicate to make statements like this from the pulpit. It is my humble opinion that we, ministers, do not make enough of them. Such objections do not arise from the purity corner of moral reform. They come from the prudery, which is the devil's caricature of purity.

It is only those with stained imaginations and a guilty conscience who cannot think of the birth of children without a blush of shame. Look out for that woman who despises children and sneers at the God-ordained process of replenishing the earth. To a man who has a clean heart and a pure mind the whole subject of married intercourse is a pure and lovely mystery of God. What can be more pure and holy than this union which, by God's blessing, makes the Christian home.

Secondly, marriage was instituted to avoid fornication. The only Scriptural ground for divorce is fornication. Unfaithfulness. And in the third place marriage was ordained for the mutual help, physically, socially and spiritually, men and women are capable of rendering to each. Man and wife will either drag each other down to hell, or lift each other up to the heights of glory. If married life is cursed with the spirit of selfishness each seeking only what he can get from the other, than the shadow of hell will soon fall on the home, and love will fly out of the first open window. But if each takes up the Cross of Christ, and learns from Him the spirit of self-sacrifice, and with steadfast purpose, each lives for the other, striving each day to the best of his or her ability to fulfil the marriage vow, then in mutual service they will find the fulness of life, peace and joy. But it is impossible to have a Christian home if men and women will not strive to cultivate the Christ spirit, and you cannot exercise the Christian spirit, unless you first take Christ as your personal Saviour.

First, get married to Jesus, then married to the Christian woman of your choice, and you will have a little heaven on earth. The only safeguard of the Christian home is for parents to attend their church regularly. Every newly-married couple should as soon as possible, have a church home. By mutual consent establish a church home. Do you ask me which church. There is only one, and that is the Church of Christ as found in the New Testament. There may be many branches, but only one church.

There are many other things I could speak of, but time will not permit. I only hope and trust that I have said some things to reveal to you, in a measure at least, what it really means to love, court and marry a pure, noble woman, or a manly man.

If any of you feel that I have idealized the relations between husband and wife, I can only plead that there will be many who will try to make them seem poor and mean and commonplace to you, and few enough who will seek to throw around your living the glow and fascination of the spiritual in home life. To make married life what it ought to be in this world, there must ever be, as an undercurrent to our thinking and living, the thought of the other world, and the consecration of that higher love towards God that hallows and gives permanence to all human affection. Martin Luther's wedding ring bore an image of Christ. Every true marriage will bear such a seal, inwardly and outwardly. Yes, put Christ in your heart; put Christ on the wedding ring; put Christ in the home, and love, courtship and marriage will be to you a joy and eternal blessing. Amen.

ST. GEORGE'S DAY HONOURED BY ENGLISHMEN OF THE CITY

In Company With S. O. E. Brethren Marched to Church in a Body---Rev. Chas. Carpenter Delivered an Interesting Address to Large Congregation---National Songs Were Sung by the Whole Assemblage---Banquet To-night.

A large congregation assembled at St. John's church last night to hear what proved to be a most interesting sermon by Rev. Charles Carpenter, entitled "Englishmen in Canada," in connection with the observance of St George's Day. The members of the S. O. E., with other local Englishmen, marched to the church in a body, and took seats, which had been reserved for them. The church was taxed to its utmost capacity. Special music, of a very pleasing and appropriate character was given by the choir, and several National songs were sung by the whole assemblage.

"All who come from the Old Country, should remember th t they have a duty to perform here in Canada," said Rev. Chas. Carpenter, in his interesting address. "There was a time, when Canada was considered by the people of the Old Land, to be only a dumping ground for these people, who constituted the overflow population, and those who were not required in the Old Land. And there are men to-day, who would still stay with the old idea, so that the name 'English' is often ignored, so to speak, by Canadians."

"There is no man better than the true Englishman, but the man who left England because he was too big to fill a position there, will find that he is too small to fill a position here There is also another type of English man. That is the man who cannot understand that there are other ways of doing a thing besides the English way. He is the dissatisfied man. He should remember that a new country has a new way of doing things. But because he cannot associate the old methods with the new, he feels bewildered. He sees things here that are entirely new to him. But it is our duty to be patient with that brother who cannot understand. The work in the old land is done more finely than it is here, and the Englishman has the idea that it is not how much he does, but how well he does it, but he is wrong, for here the man who makes the biggest show, is considered to be the worker. One point is, that the Englishman should not try to teach the Canadians to do things, because if he does he will find himself left. When a true Englishman comes to Canada, he finds that here, he has an opportunity to do better and to fight his way to the front The discontented man is the one who causes the trouble. He is the one who always hears the Canadians saying, Canada for the Canadians." He is the one who always complains that the Canadians always get the best jobs and get all the chances Again, it is too often told him, that this is no country for him, and he had better get out. In these two illustrations, both sides are wrong, and it is for us to better things. There is a type of Englishman who will work, and although he cannot forget the Old Country, he will and should devote himself to the needs of the new. We must bring out those higher types of character in the Englishman. We must bring out the nobler character, men who are willing to seek their fortune in life, and willing to work. Canada is made up of men who have high ideals, and one strong soul can be a great help to its weaker brethren. The Englishman must study the politics of the new country; he must work shoulder to shoulder with his brothers and not stand on the outside. He must give the best that is in him to Canada, if he expects to get the best out of Canada. Let him not be backward in professing Christianity. In professing it he will win the respect of his brothers.

"To build up a nation, every man must build up himself, and Canada asks that every Englishman fulfil the promise that England has made that she shall be the foremost country in missionary work. You should throw your interest into the missionary work, and learn to support your church and your religion."

In closing, Mr. Carpenter said, "To night I have endeavoured to outline in a very imperfect way the stumbling block of the Englishmen in Canada. And every Canadian should try and make the Englishman feel as much at home as possible, let them feel that they are welcome. Help them to understand you more and more, and so whether we are English or Canadian, we should dedicate our services to the church, to the good of the country, and for the benefit of our religion, for if the man gives the best that is in him, the Lord will surely repay him for it."

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—I read with much interest an article in the Examiner giving traditions in reference to the coronation stone. They were in great measure new to me. When I was a boy the tradition common in England was that at the destruction of Jerusalem the Prophet Jeremiah escaped to Egypt with the daughter of Zedekiah the king. He was accompanied by Baruch the Scribe, and they took with them the celebrated stone. The legend does not say where it had been all the time since Jacob slept on it. They then made their way to Ireland (still carrying the stone), where the royal princesses married into the families of the local chieftains. One of these was named Dermot, who was the direct ancestor of the Fergus who carried the stone to Scotland. The Abbe MacGeoghegan, in his history of Ireland states that among the original settlers of Ireland was a colony known as the Inatha de Danians, who hailed from the country of Norway and Denmark. "They brought from that country the famous stone called "Lia-Fail," in Latin "saxum fatale." This stone, which gave to Ireland the name of "Innisfail," or the Island of Fail, was used at the coronation of their kings; it is pretended that during the ceremony an astonishing noise issued from it. . . . But the coming of the Messiah, which made all those pagan superstitions vanish, caused the stone also to lose its virtue. There is a prophecy, likewise, which says that wherever the stone be preserved a prince of the race of the Scots should reign. . . . In the beginning of the third century, before Christian era Feargus the Great, son of Earcha, having been elected by the Dalriads of Albania for their chief; and seeing that he was able to get himself crowned king, sent to ask the stone from Murtough, then monarch of Ireland, in order to make the ceremony of his inauguration more solemn and august ,and to perpetuate the diadem in his own family. The monarch readily granted the request of Feargus, who got himself crowned first king of the Dalraids of Albania, on that stone, which was preserved with veneration in the Abbey of Scone, till the thirteenth century, when it was forcibly carried off by Edward I.

Another tradition is that the stone emits a groan when an unlawful king is crowned upon it. A not unreasonable supposition, as every monarch claims that he is legitimate in some way or other, for which reason the stone was never heard to groan.

PETERBORO' CLUB'S FAREWELL TO MR. PETER CAMPBELL

On Saturday evening about sixty of the leading members of the Peterborough Club—representative of our best citizenship—assembled in the club rooms at a "smoker" organized to wish Mr. Peter Campbell bon voyage on his visit to the Old Country as a member of the world-wide coronation procession to the Meccs of the Empire, in the year of grace, 1911.

Mr. R. E. Wood, president of the club, in proposing the toast of Mr. Campbell, said that they had met for the purpose of extending good wishes to Mr. Campbell, a member of the club and a prominent and highly respected citizen, on the eve of his departure on an extended voyage to Great Britain and the continent, accompanied by Mr. Campbell, who was warmly included in the good wishes for a pleasant voyage and safe return, cordially extended to Mr. Campbell. The president referred to the prominent place occupied by Mr. Campbell as a citizen, and his active interest in every undertaking that would be for the benefit of the city and its people. He hoped that both himself and wife would have a most enjoyable experience in visiting the numberless places and objects of interest, the old world presented, and wished them both a safe voyage and happy return.

Hon. Mr. Stratton, in speaking to the toast, said that he fully endorsed the remarks of the president, which involved a tribute, in every way, well deserved. He heartily joined in the good wishes expressed for a pleasant journey and safe return, for both Mr. and Mrs. Campbell. In this he felt that he was expressing not only the sentiments of the president, but of every member of the club, and indeed, of every citizen to whom Mr. Campbell's unassuming and quiet, effective way of doing good, and in the fullest way discharging in a public-spirited manner the duties of citizenship in all its relations, was an exmple worthy of emulation. Not only would his associates in the Peterborough club regret even the temporary loss of his presence among them, but others would miss the exhibition of his practical interest in the various activities to which he lent himself. The inmates of the Children's Shelter, in whose welfare as treasurer of the Children's Aaid Society, Mr. Campbell had done effective work, would also miss him, and remember him with gratitude As Treasurer of the Board of Trade, as a member of St. John's church, where he had held office and sensibly aided the promotion of its interests, and in fact in everything in which he was associated, his connection was marked by prominent action.

The toast was enthusiastically drunk, coupled with the best wishes of all present for a pleasant voyage and safe return for Mr. and Mrs. Campbell.

During the evening stirring and appropriate songs were sung by Messrs. Crane, Denham and McIlroy.

Whatever enjoyment Mr. Campbell may gain by his three months' tour, he will, judging by the enthusiasm of his send-off on Saturday night, never lose sight of the warm welcome that awaits his home-coming.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, leave town on Wednesday, and will sail on Saturday from New York.

"THE KISSING GIRL"

Next Thursday, April 7th, at the Grand Theatre, the latest comic opera success, "The Kissing Girl," direct from its phenomenal run of nearly 250 performances at The Cort Theatre, Chicago, will reveal the charms of its tuneful score and the beauty of a cast of principals and chorus said to be of great loveliness.

It should prove doubly welcome to the theatre-going public of this city because of the originality of its dialogue, and the musicianly quality of its melodies, together with the eminence of its cast of principals. Mr. Slocum is alive to the value of this city in its appreciation of good comic opera and has more faith in the discriminating taste of the city than have many of the Eastern theatrical magnates. With his partners, he has lavished a vast sum in producing "The Kissing Girl," and is firm in the conviction that the company generally will support the clever organization which he now presents.

The company selected for "The Kissing Girl" is one of power, not only in a musical sense, but in dramatic interpretation of lyrical works. Miss Texas Guinan, niece of United States Senator Joe Bailey, of Texas, will be featured in the name role. Supporting her will be Harry Hermsen, the comedian of Royal Chef fame, Tom Whiffen, a member of the Henry W. Savage forces for a number of years, Miss Venita Fitzhugh, will sing the Prima Donna role, Mr. Louis London, the tenor, and Miss Ida Fitzhugh, a distinguished German comedienne. These with a chorus of handsome men and beautiful women, that know how to sing, furnish an ensemble of 60 people. The scenes of the opera are laid in a village nestled in the heart of a Bohemian forest near the Austrian boundary. This gives fine scope for picturesque scenery as well as the exhibition of quaint costumes worn by the peasants of that section. The ingenuity of the plot is in itself pleasing. Instead of spasmodic carrications we come across every day human beings undisguised. The seat sale opens to-morrow (Tuesday) morning.

TEMPERANCE PROGRAMME

The Royal Templars of the city have been invited to give the programme at the St. James' Epworth League to-night, which promises to be one of considerable interest.

The public are cordially invited to be present. No charge for admission.

A BILIOUS HEADACHE

Bile in the blood is poison and causes pain. Liberals Will Send Veto Bill to Lords Next Month—Ministers Hope to Put Parliamentary Measure Through Before Coronation

LITTLE TROUBLE

London, April 24.—The Ministers have determined to force the Parliament bill through the Commons by the end of the third week in May, and, having the majority behind them, they will do it. This date corresponds with the German Emperor's visit to the unveiling of the Victoria memorial and the assembling of the Imperial Conference. It will not be a favorable time for strenuous resistance by the peers.

The Ministers are reported by the resentful Unionists to be taking a highly-provocative course in demanding the passage of the bill by the Lords before the coronation. This is a partisan exaggeration. The Ministers will be satisfied if the measure can be carried to a second reading in the Upper House before the coronation. Probably this will be done, and the month of July will be reserved for the committee stage, with belated and ineffectual efforts to obtain a compromise. There is loud talk outside of Parliament about the peers fighting in the last ditch and never surrendering, but among the Lords themselves nothing is heard about desperate remedies. The moderate men admit readily enough that the Prime Minister is invincible when he has the royal guarantees in his pocket.

Lord Lansdowne's bronchial trouble has been aggravated by influenza and he is not in good form for leading the attack on the bill. Chancellor Lloyd-George's throat is still tender, but his intimate friends insist that his health is not fatally impaired. Winston Churchill is growing old and grey under the tremendous pressure of political work.

Prof. Sieper of the University of Munich, will deliver an address at the Church House next Friday on the problems of an Anglo-German understanding. The Lord Chancellor will preside, and the International Arbitration League and the Anglo-German Friendship Committee will welcome him as a peacemaker. This is timely movement in view of the German Emperor's visit, the Bagdad Railway enterprise and the renewal of complications in Morocco, but public interest in it needs to be artificially stimulated.

For otherwise is it with the Anglo-American arbitration movement, which will receive a powerful impetus on the same day from the public meeting at the Guildhall, which will be addressed by Premier Asquith and A. J. Balfour. That is a course which encourages no resistance and commands popular enthusiasm. The American Ambassador will probably be present, but will not speak so soon after the Albert Hall demonstration.

Compartment Sleepers.

Montreal, April 24.—In a few weeks the C.P.R. will start building at its Angus shops, Montreal, six new compartment sleeping cars, which will be a distinct departure from the sleeping cars at present operated by the company. The new cars will be of practically the same exterior dimensions as the ordinary sleepers, but in the inside instead of having berths separated by curtains, the car will be divided into compartments. There will be seven of these compartments and they will resemble somewhat the staterooms on board the ocean liners. Each stateroom will have its own electric lights, wash basin, etc.

These new cars will be used on the Imperial Limited.

The Angus shops of the C.P.R. at Montreal have just issued ten new switching engines. These engines are of the standard size build and will be distributed throughout the company's lines.

To Be Forced From Border.

Chihuahua (via Laredo), Texas, April 24.—Preparations to fight the insurrectos proceeded here Saturday. Gen. Rabagos, with a column of cavalry, which had started to engage the rebels at Ojinaga, was hurriedly recalled, and he, with Gen. Lis and 1,000 men were ordered to proceed to the border, presumably at Juarez.

It is the purpose of the federals to wedge in between the border and the insurrecto forces, and if possible drive the conflict back into the interior, out of the way of possible international complications.

The northward march of the federals is directed at Gen. Madero's main force.

LABOURITE IS JAILED

Prominent Official is Charged With Dynamiting—John J. McNamara is Arrested at Indianapolis

EXPLOSIVE FOUND

Indianapolis, Ind., April 24.—After months of investigation, directed by Wm. J. Burns, the San Francisco graft investigator, now head of a detective agency, John J. McNamara, international secretary of the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers of America, the headquarters of which are in Indianapolis, was arrested here late Saturday charged with complicity in the dynamiting of the Los Angeles Times, on Oct. 1, 1910, and the plant of the Llewellyn Iron Works in Los Angeles.

Four hours after McNamara was arrested, detectives found two quarts of nitro-glycerine and seventeen sticks of dynamite in a barn three-quarters of a mile west of Indianapolis. The barn, the detectives say, was rented by McNamara from T. H. Jones, the owner.

A later investigation of the international offices of the union disclosed, in a storeroom, in the basement of the building, 64 sticks of dynamite, 200 feet of fuse, 500 dynamite caps, one dozen small alarm clocks and a leather case made to carry a ten-pound can of nitro-glycerine. Detective Burns took possession of all the explosives.

Requisition papers from the Governor of California, having been signed by Governor Marshall, before the arrest of McNamara. He was arraigned immediately before Judge Collins in the Police Court.

Twenty minutes after McNamara had been seized in the association headquarters in the American Central Life Building, where a meeting of the executive board of the organization was just adjourning, he was taken from the city by four detectives, in an auto. It is supposed it was the object of the officers to get McNamara out of reach before his friends had a chance to fight the requisition.

Soon after the prisoner had been hurried into the awaiting automobile Detective Burns ran for another automobile and rode to the American Central Life Building, where F. M. Ryan, president of the association, and six members of the executive board were being held by the police, pending an investigation. Doors of the room were guarded with a squad of police.

Immediately after the offices of the union were searched, Detective Burns and a squad of his men went to the barn west of Indianapolis, where the explosives were unearthed. The detectives then returned to the city when a search in the basement of the union headquarters revealed more explosives.

President Ryan said last night that he had been connected with union labor for several years, and had never heard of a case similar to the one charged to McNamara, but he had known of cases where "plants" had been made by enemies of labor organizations, and that if explosives were found Saturday night they must have been placed by enemies of the organization.

The custodian of the building where the offices of the union are, said that McNamara had come to him six months ago and asked for a store room and that the request had been granted. He added that he had never seen McNamara or his companions carry anything to the store room.

Burns says Otto Manigal, who was arrested in Detroit, told him where these explosives could be found, and it was upon this information that the search was made on Saturday night. The dynamite and nitro-glycerine were found buried under sawdust in the barn.

Jones, the owner of the barn, is also a structural iron worker. He said the explosives were placed there last January, and that McNamara and other men made various trips to the barn with suit cases, but he did not know the purpose of their visits. Jones says that McNamara rented the barn and paid him $25 a month for its use. It is situated about three-quarters of a mile west of the city.

Wood Has Confession.

Chicago, April 24.—Capt. Stephen Wood, chief of the Chicago detective bureau, said last night that a full confession had been obtained from one of the men arrested in Detroit in connection with the dynamiting of The Los Angeles Times' building. Detective Burns has already stated that he had got information of the whereabout of the dynamite in Indianapolis from McGonigle. Acting on the information presumably obtained in the confession referred to, Burns located a rough wooden box containing dynamite in a shed behind the house of James McGonigle, father of the prisoner, at Tiffin, Ohio.

Captain Wood says that the confession covers ninety typewritten pages and describes in detail the dynamiting of buildings, railroad trains and factories, entailing the loss of many lives and two million dollars' worth of property.

GUNNING FOR JUDGE.

Roland Tanner Sought Revenge and Has Disappeared.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 24.—The provincial police last night said they believed Roland B. Tanner, who left his home at Fonthill, Saturday afternoon, declaring he would kill County Judge Wells, has been drowned in the Welland Canal. Tanner was arrested several months ago on a warrant charging him with criminal libel of Judge Wells. He was later thought to be demented, and detained in jail, but was released Friday, returning to his home.

In spite of all the members of his family could do, Tanner left his farm at Fonthill, near here, Saturday, with an old gun under his arm, declaring he would get Judge Wells. The police traced him to near the canal, but nothing of his whereabouts are actually known. Officers are divided between their fear for the life of the judge and the belief that Tanner has gone to a watery grave.

Would Weaken Empire.

New York, April 24.—A London cable to The Evening Post says: The Parliamentary discussion this week about the imperial conference, and letters in The Times, evidently by important personages, reveal an unsuspected weak spot in the constitutional theory of the British Empire, namely, the increasing desire of the colonies to have their own foreign policy, irrespective of England.

The Empire's attitude towards Japan undoubtedly is the subject of the gravest discussion. The Government promises to reveal all Cabinet secrets to the colonial Premiers "under absolute secrecy." One writer in The Times says that Canada may use her navy to support a policy which England does not want, and that Australia may be threatening Japan when England and Japan are engaged in delicate negotiations about a Japanese alliance.

Australia, by the advice of the English admiral, lent for the purpose, proposes to built a fleet of fifty-two vessels at a cost of $410,000,000.

Forbid Clergy to Attend.

Viterbo, April 24.—(New York Sun Cable.)—The bishop has forbidden the clergy to attend the Camorrists' trial upon pain of excommunication unless they are subpoenaed. Abbatemaggio is still ailing, but he insisted Saturday upon attending the trial.

The judge concluded the examination of the prisoners, including Maria Standardos. The session was then adjourned until next Tuesday, when the prisoners will be confronted by Abbatemaggio. A wild scene is expected.

A letter has been received from the Naples chemist Scotto saying that he intended to commit suicide, explaining that he was affected with incurable heart disease. It is an open secret that Scotto is one of the important witnesses for the prosecution and has repeatedly shammed suicide to escape Camorra vengeance.

The police suspect that he is shamming again.

In Memory of King Edward.

Plattsburg, N.Y., April 24.—A movement has been inaugurated to name the proposed New York to Montreal international highway in honor of President Taft and the late King Edward, in recognition of their efforts in the cause of peace.

Geo. A. Simard of Montreal, chairman of the Canada committee, formed to accomplish the building of the Canadian end of the road from Rouse's Point to Montreal, made the suggestion that part of the international highway be named King Edward road, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier is also known to be heartily in favor of the idea.

Howard D. Hadley of this city, chairman of the committee formed to bring about the building of the New York portion of the highway, now suggests that it be named Taft road.

Armistice For Five Days.

El Paso, Texas, April 24.—An armistice of five days beginning at noon was signed yesterday by Gen. Francisco I. Madero, the revolutionary leader, and Gen. Juan Navarro, the federal commander at Juarez. Peace negotiations were immediately begun with Mexico City, though the Government does not officially recognize the insurgents.

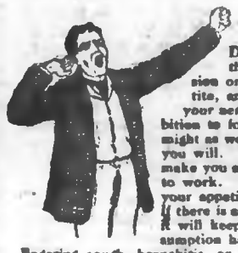
It affects only the district between Juarez and Chihuahua, but its conditions will extend to Ojinaja, which is under siege by 1,800 insurrectos.

Listowel Board of Trade.

Listowel, April 24.—At a largely attended meeting of Listowel business men last night, the dormant Board of Trade was revived, and new officers elected as follows: President, F. W. Hay; vice-president, J. Watson; secretary-treasurer, J. H. Gunther.

An active publicity and industrial propaganda will be inaugurated, and the council will be asked for $300 to $400 to pay the bill.

Do You Feel This Way?



Do you feel all tired out? Do you sometimes think you just can't work away at your profession or trade any longer? Do you have a poor appetite, and lay awake at nights unable to sleep? Are your nerves all gone, and your stomach too? Has ambition to forge ahead in the world left you? If so, you might as well put a stop to your misery. You can do it if you will. MOROCCO SITUATION

France May be Forced to Occupy the Republic—Going to Rescue of Fez—Reinforcements Are Being Sent to Relieve Pressure

PEOPLE RELUCTANT

Paris, April 24.—Events are working for that powerful, if silent, party which hopes for a military expedition to Morocco with ensuing occupation on the lines of England's occupation of Egypt. To the French people generally any extension of French action in Morocco, or indeed any imperialistic policy anywhere, is repugnant, but the opposition is silenced when responsible papers declare that their countrymen and countrywomen's lives are imperilled at Fez, with headlines expressing wonder if relief can reach them in time.

Gen. Moinier, commanding the French forces at Casablanca, reports that the Chaouian column from his district will be ready to start within five or six days and may be expected to reach Fez, 3,500 to 4,000 strong, on May 3 or 4. They will be commanded by French officers, with a framework of French troops, but the Government refuses to say how many.

El Mokri, the Foreign Minister of Mulai Hafid, who is in Paris, is convinced that Fez has not been taken. It is too strongly fortified for the tribesmen, with the means at their disposal, to carry it.

Reinforcements which left Marseilles on Friday and Saturday, numbering over 2,000 men, will reach Casablanca in ten days. A simultaneous effort to relieve the pressure on Fez is being made by sending 8,000 men from Oran to a point 120 miles east of Fez; but if this column is sent to Fez later it will have to traverse a difficult country inhabited by the most hostile warrior tribes.

Tangier, April 24.—A despatch from Fez, dated April 15, says that the situation growing out of the revolt of the tribesmen was then unchanged, but that Europeans there, were slightly less anxious than they had been. The despatch also says that the prices of foodstuffs has been reduced.

Charged With Theft.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 24.—Charged with stealing $40,000 worth of jewels from a wealthy New York widow, whose acquaintance he had made in that city, Robert J. Davidson of Ottawa, was arrested by Detective Scanlon of this city and Detective Barnshow, of Atlantic City, Saturday night and locked up at the central station for a hearing to-day.

According to the detectives, Davidson was traced by means of pawn tickets, having pledged a ring, valued at $100, at the seashore resort and one in Philadelphia. The woman who makes the charge is Mrs. Fannie Caldwell, of No. 253 West 72nd street, New York City.

Scored Unwritten Law.

Atlanta, Ga., April 23.—The application for pardon of Thomas E. Stripling, was late yesterday afternoon denied by Governor Brown.

Stripling was formerly chief of police of Danville, Va., and was under life sentence for killing W. J. Cornett. He escaped from officers years ago and had been successful in business under an assumed name.

Governor Brown scored the "unwritten law," to which Stripling appealed for justification as an anarchistic argument, and in Stripling's escape and subsequent career said he found no reason to change the decision of the courts.

Transformer Eleven Won Splendid Soccer Game Beat Knox Team 1 To 0

The Knox Presbyterians and the Transformers XI met in a friendly game on the grounds of the former, Patterson street, Saturday. The opening stages were in favour of Knox, who had the wind in their favour. Getting away on the right, and with Cole well beaten they looked all-over scorers, but Stacey rushing out, just cleared before he was bowled over, the Scots men using their weight with good effect. Again they came on, but Cole faced them and put the ball out. From the goal kick, Miller got away on the right, but Lewis sent him on to the fence, thus spoiling a nice run. From the throw in Dixon and McPherson got away on the left, centred to Patten and Godfrey. His kicking let in Johnson, who sent in a nice shot, but Stacey was safe and easily cleared. The Transformers now took up the attack and the goal tender was called on to save a long shot from Miller, which he did with some style. Lewis and Kellibrick were playing a good game at back and repeatedly broke up the advances of the Transformers. A foul against Campbell, gave Knox a chance and Patten sent in a beauty, only to find Stacey waiting. Catching the ball in the top corner he brought off a nice save, and kicking well out he gave Pearson and Miller the opening they were waiting for. Racing down the right, Pearson centred and Smith, passing well out to Elliott, the latter centred and Yates put through, only to be counted offside. This put more life into the Transformers and up to the end of the first half they gave the Knox defence plenty to do. Twice they missed good openings and shot wide. The interval ended with no score.

On resuming, the Knox players came down in a body and Stacey had all on to clear twice in succession, giving a corner the second time. This was taken by Dixon, who put behind from the goal kick. Miller got away and took the ball well up, but shot wide. Play now settled in midfield with no advantage to either side. Hereabout the game was stopped owing to the Presbyterians playing 12 men. From the throw up Dixon got away on the left and sent in a low drive which looked very dangerous, but Godfrey rushed in and forced a corner. This was taken by Dixon and well placed, but Cole headed to McGarraty, who passed on to Heffernan and Elliott, and Yates getting possession, carried the ball up to the Knox goal which was bombarded and finally, after saving two good shots the ball was literally carried through by the whole of the Transformer forwards. This set the Presbyterians on their mettle and they did everything in their power to equalise and for a time it looked a sure thing, but Stacey had always to be reckoned with and he brought off three fine saves in as many minutes. Again the Transformers got going and tried hard to increase their lead, Smith sending a beauty through, but owing to the Presbyterians playing a one-back game, he was ruled offside. Both teams fought hard right up to the finish and the ninety minutes came with the Transformers winners by 1 goal to 0.

A WOMAN'S BACK.

Not One Woman In Twenty Has a Stong Back.

The kidneys are to blame nine times out of ten.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be carried off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hardly to be wondered that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Man., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

SHOULD A GIRL TELL HER PAST?

What a turmoil! What a hubbub seem to have arisen from some innocent comments I made on Ruth Cameron's "Chit-Chat." Notwithstanding all the correspondence and diversity of opinions therein, to say nothing of the slatings I have received, I still stick to my guns, and do not haul down my flag.

Throughout my remarks I have endeavored to steer clear of personal allusions. If any observations have been taken as such, I can only say I am sorry. Yet not so all your correspondents. Some have descended to vulgarity. Even in these days of advanced art and science, it is an impossibility to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

The majority of correspondents seem to have missed the main issue, which is nothing more or less than this:—Should the girl with a past own up—assuming she feels she must sooner or later make the confession—before or after marriage? There is the whole thing in a nutshell.

Does anyone suppose that a man who bona fide loves some sweet girl would gratuitously insult her by even the suggestion that she might possibly have a past. I trow not! Out on the bare thought of such a thing, I wouldn't for one! I would take it for granted that she was all that was good. And "Where ignorance is bliss 'twere folly to be wise."

"Another Mother" wonders why men who have sown their "wild oats," look for a good pure girl for a wife. Why! "Experientia docet. When after a time, the first and worst mistakes have been made and suffered for, and the only teaching that profits anything at all—the teaching of experience—has been laid to heart then it is that men know by this bitter experience of the past what is the untold and huberto possibly unthought of value of a good pure woman as a wife. "Wild oats" is a crop which all men sooner or later must sow in a larger or smaller field; it is our legacy of human frailty, and it is a crop that always comes to harvest, whether the ingathering be of regret or remorse. We find that all has been vanity and vexation of spirit. But evil is wrought more by want of thought rather than from want of heart. Moreover the man who has sown this crop knows how to advise his children when they grow up, and warn them how to avoid the snares and pitfalls that beset them in their first walks alone along the pathway of life.

"Another Mother" agrees with me that all men have "a past." Yes! they all, or nearly all, have. There are exceptions. We will delete from the sinful ones those two "good gendemen" who advertised their spotlessness recently in your columns. O "rarae aves in terras!" Can they belong to the type who are shining constellations in muffin struggles and tea fights and are foremost in gossip and scandal mongering meetings, who go home and bully their younger brothers and sisters and break the ninth commandment much more frequently and easily than do the men they reprobate break the seventh. Yet people can guard themselves against a breach of that commmandment; they can lock up their belongings against the depredation of the violation of the eighth, but hang me! if any one is safe against the detractor who insinuates, if he (or she) doesn't openly lie, as he glibly breaks the ninth commandment.

But the past of most of us need not of necessity have been very sinful. Most of us have probably been guilty of some excesses and follies when there has been "youth at the prow, and pleasure at the helm," and the sins in many cases have been more of thoughtlessness and carelessness rather than of deliberate intent. Such men, when grown up, are apt to have seen the errors of their ways, and settle down, and make good husbands and fathers; whereas the "goody-goody young man" is much more likely to have "his fling" after marriage, and then comes dire unhappiness and terrible example. The former, having sown and harvested his wild oat crop, appreciates to the fullest extent the bliss, the happiness of loving and being loved by a good woman; and, by comparison with former associates, is able to set an enhanced value on the "pure blossom," if he be so fortunate as to be permitted to pluck her; and rejoicing in the undivided love of a pure, clean-souled woman, would for very shame be loth to own up to the delinquencies of his younger days; things which happened long before he knew the loving girl, to whom he has given his whole regenerated heart and soul, lest he should bring a blush to her sweet loving face, or in anyway lower the good opinion she has of him.

Is a man, I repeat, because he has committed follies in his youth, to be debarred from later on—when he has seen the error of his ways—the possession of a good pure wife? "Isolation!" it has been said, "is the sum total of wretchedness to man." Love received, as well as given, is a safeguard against many temptations. Is he to be shut out of a terrestial paradise because he is not perfect, or is he to be relegated to the bachelor's consoler—my Lady Nicotine; or worse still, if he be fool enough, to the whisky bottle—his pipe and glass. O Dea Nicotina, quu tu! consolatrix mea es.

"Suffragette" suggests "inter alia" that I should read a certain portion of the Gospel of the holy St. John. Oh, I have read this story she refers to over and over again. This is not the place to expatiate on its pathos and beauty, so I will but briefly refer to her remarks. "Who pointed the finger of scorn?" Why men, I grant, but they were Scribes and Pharisees, who, hating our Blessed Lord, were banded together with the object of 'tempting Him that they might have occasion to accuse Him." I own that in the case in question the finger of scorn was pointed at a defenceless woman by man (many men are but brutes and cowards after all) but that was part and parcel of the plan whereby they might find accusation against Him. "Where was her companion?" For the purpose of the lesson to be taught it was not necessary, evidently, that he be brought into evidence. "Why was she not stoned?" Because all the accusers had more less of a past "from the eldest even unto the last." None of the crowd dared to condemn her for not a soul of them but was convicted by his own conscience. None dared to cast the first stone. Even so One—the Divine Man—said, "Go, and sin no more"; cannot we try to say "Even as I hope for pardon in that day when

DISCUSSED ON EVERY SIDE

TORONTO, APRIL 24.—This city, as the centre of Trades Unionism in Canada, is discussing on all sides the arrest of J. J. McNamara, secretary International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers Union, charged with complicity resulting in wholesale murder of non-union workers in the States, including the blowing up of the oLs Angeles Times building. It is considered by union leaders here that trades unionism in Canada, as well as United tSates, is put on trial by this case. They ask fellow unionists and public generally to withhold judgment in the matter till facts are brought out. Toronto men who know McNamara personally, say he was the last man to associate in such an outrage. Iron workers' union is strong in Canada.

SECURED DEGREE OF B.A.

Miss Mattie B. Robertson passed her final examination in Arts, at Queen's College, Kingston, last week, and secured the degree of B.A., being an honour specialist in modern languages.

COUNTER ARREST IS MADE

Indianapolis Labourites Lay a Charge of Kidnapping and Three Men Are Jailed, including Prosecuting Attorney

BURNS INVOLVED

Indianapolis, Ind., April 25.—Drew, counsel for the Erectors' Association; W. J. Ford, assistant district attorney of Los Angeles, and Frank Fox, chauffeur, were arrested last night on affidavits charging them with having kidnapped J. J. McNamara, secretary and treasurer of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers.

The men were arrested on warrants issued in the Court of Justice of the Peace Manning, after affidavits against them had been made by the attorney for McNamara. Drew and Ford were released under bond of $5,000 each, and Fox under a bond of $3,000. All the bonds were given by Wm. A. Ketchum, president of an iron foundry company, and an officer of the Indianapolis Employers' Association.

It is charged that, though McNamara was not turned over to a detective sergeant from Los Angeles until Governor Marshall had honored requisition papers from the Governor of California, he had not been permitted to consult with counsel or to make a plea of resistance to extradition before Police Judge Collins when he was identified as the man named in the warrant for his arrest.

Fox drove the automobile in which McNamara was taken to Chicago on Saturday night, to be placed aboard a train for Los Angeles.

It was stated that a warrant also had been issued on the same charge against Detective Wm. J. Burns, in the employ of the Erectors' Association.

Kohler In Trouble Again.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 25.—Open war on Chief of Police Kohler was declared Sunday by members of the Forum Club, a social organization of police officers, when five of their number raided down town saloons and arrested the proprietors on charges of disobeying the Sunday closing law.

After they had arrested ten saloon keeper Kohler "golden ruled" the prisoners, and forbade all stations to accept prisoners sent in by the raiding patrolmen. Kohler, it will be remember, was "court-martialed" a year or so ago, but disproved numerous serious charges preferred against him. He is known in police circles the world over because of his reform methods.

France Eager to Interfere.

Berlin, April 25.—The German Foreign Office has assumed an attitude of reserve regarding developments in Morocco, but the press generally concluded that the situation at Fez does not justify the march thither of the French troops, and intimates that France is forcing an occasion to occupy Morocco permanently.

This action, it is pointed out, goes beyond the Algeciras agreement, and several papers suggest that a new conference be held.

The Pan-German League demands the partition of Morocco, Germany to receive the Atlantic coast.

Ten Miners Lost.

Elkmarden, W. Va., April 25.—Ten miners are reported to have been killed in a gas or dust explosion in Ott Mine No. 30 of the Davis Coal & Coke Co., about a mile from this place.

IS VOTED DOWN

London, April 25.—The House of Commons sat very late last night in its discussion of the second clause of the Parliament bill, which relates to the curtailment of the powers of the House of Lords, and rejected numerous amendments seeking to exclude all sorts of measures from the operation of the bill.

The anti-home rule amendment, proposing to exclude "any bill to establish a separate Parliament and executive for Ireland," which was moved by John B. Lonsdale, Unionist member for Mid-Armagh, was defeated by a vote of 284 to 190. The division on this amendment showed no cross-voting, but a few Liberals, including Neil Primrose, the youngest son of the Earl of Rosebery, abstained from voting.

Both Premier Asquith and Home Secretary Churchill during the course of the debate reiterated the Government's intention to proceed with the bill for the reform of the House of Lords during the lifetime of the present Parliament. Mr. Churchill explained that the fact that the Parliament bill, although it secured predominance of the House of Commons, would still leave the House of Lords the power of vexatious interference with Liberal measures, was in itself security that the Government would seek to reform the Upper Chamber.

John George Butcher, Unionist member for York City, moved an amendment exempting from the operation of clause two any bill affecting the continued existence of the crown's prerogatives. In opposing this amendment, Sir Robert B. Finlay, the Attorney-General, said the security of the crown rested on the loyalty of the people, and it would be an evil day for the crown when it depended for existence upon the Lords' veto.

The Butcher amendment was then defeated by 273 to 168.

Shut Up in Box-Car.

New York, April 25.—From the depths of a box-car loaded with flour in Cleveland, Ohio, last week, there emanated out to the platform of the New Jersey Central freight yards in Jersey City, yesterday an emaciated boy of fifteen years. He gasped for water and food, and after he had been refreshed told those about him that he was Hyenen Golden of No. 2,636 East 65th street, Cleveland, Ohio, and that he had been locked in the car last Thursday.

"I was sent into the car to count the flour sacks," he said. "Some one closed the door while I was doing this. I beat against it and shouted, but it did no good."

Her Dress Caught Fire.

She is an elderly lady, and while out burning leaves her dress became ignited, and she was soon enveloped in flames. Reciprocity Bill Cannot Come Up In U. S. Senate Now.

Washington, D.C., April 25.—The reference of the reciprocity bill to the Senate Finance Committee yesterday does not mean that its progress has been accelerated. The action was formal, and there is no possibility of the committee seriously considering the bill until it has reorganized. This will take until the end of the week at least.

Insurgent and stand-pat Republicans are as far apart as ever to-day. It became known that the only insurgent who will go on the finance committee, namely, Senator Lafollette of Wisconsin, is unfriendly to the present agreement in its present form. Senator Cummins, the Iowa insurgent, is apparently to be left off the committee. He is expected to vote for reciprocity.

PUT THE BLAME ON THE GLOBE

Six Conservatives Who Voted for Reciprocity Find Themselves in a Queer Predicament—Declare Resolution Was Not All Read

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

Ottawa, April 25.—The statement in The Toronto Globe yesterday morning that the amendment of W. O. Sealey of Wentworth to the reciprocity resolution calling for the deletion of the fruit and vegetable clauses contained also an endorsation of the general agreement in the following terms: "That the agreement as amended be adopted," and that six of the Conservatives who had voted for the amendment had thereby committed themselves to an approval of the reciprocity proposals occasioned a prolonged discussion on the motion to go into committee on ways and means in the Commons yesterday.

Haughton Lennox, who brought up the matter, stated that the amendment by Mr. Sealey contained no such general endorsation of the reciprocity agreement, and pointed out that the Hansard report did not contain the words which had been attached to it by The Globe. He described it "as a deliberate, inexcusable falsification, an absolutely untruthful and unfounded statement, a slanderous statement that goes beyond the pale of anything we have had in Parliament for some time." The Conservative members had evinced their thorough opposition to the reciprocity proposals, yet The Globe had construed it as a Conservative vote for reciprocity. He said it was a "diabolical and utterly unjustifiable a falsification as had been conceived. It had been conceived and executed on Sunday, he believed, "under the sanctimonious aegis of the pious editor of The Globe."

Mr. Pugsley remarked that that was the amendment.

Mr. Lennox denied that it was. He stated that Mr. Pugsley did not know what he was talking about, and the Minister was in the habit of rushing in "where honest men and fair angels fear to tread." He declared that Mr. Sealey had shown "utter insincerity" in bringing forward his "faked motion." When handing his motion to the Deputy Speaker the member for Wentworth had put a note at the bottom of it begging that it be ruled out of order. The Deputy Speaker, however, refused.

Mr. Pugsley said he had voted against the amendment. He had noticed that it had dawned upon Mr. Barker of Hamilton what the effect of the amendment was and he had refused to vote for it.

Mr. Blain: "That is not true. Mr. Barker gave his reason."

Mr. Pugsley said the copy of the amendment had been handed to Hansard by the assistant, but this one line had been omitted by Hansard. He considered that The Globe reporter ought to be commended for reporting it with absolute accuracy.

Major Currie expressed the view that a scheme had been concocted and that The Globe report was based on the gossip of the wine room on Saturday. He said The Globe reporter was not in the gallery when Mr. Sealey's resolution was read.

Dr. Sproule said that the members of the press gallery were there only by courtesy, and that they could be summoned to the Bar of the House or even placed in custody for misrepresenting members. He expressed the view that a scheme had been concocted, and was inclined to the view that the Minister of Public Works had been at the bottom of it. In taking exception to Dr. Sproule's statement Mr. Pugsley used the word "[illegible]," after a point of order being raised, was asked to withdraw.

Richard Blain produced the original motion and averred that the concluding words had not been read by the Deputy Speaker. He said he made the statement without fear of contradiction by the Speaker. Mr. McIntyre, thus challenged, said the only record of the amendment in Hansard was that which appeared in Mr. Sealey's speech. Hansard unfortunately made no note of what occurred after the amendment was placed in his hands, the result being that the official copy of the amendment did not appear. Neither was there any report in Hansard of the comments he had made, after remarking that just before he read the amendment the attention of the members was taken up with a couple of points of order. The Deputy Speaker said he had read the amendment with his usual clearness and distinctness, and that he was compelled to say, as a matter of justice to himself and others, that he believed he read all of the amendment as appeared in the written record.

Mr. Blain reiterated his belief that he did not hear the latter part of the amendment read.

Dr. Roche of Marquette decided that the words were not read either by Mr. Sealey or the Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Goodeve of Kootenay made a statement to the same effect, while Messrs. Ruttan, Congdon, Nesbitt and Kyte, Liberals, all assured the House that they had heard the Deputy Speaker read it in its entirety.

Mr. Kyte closed the discussion by reading a note from The Globe reporter, H. W. Anderson, in which he stated that he would be well satisfied to appear at the Bar of the House and justify his report of the proceedings.

One Reason for Our Success
We Emphasize Accuracy
Every pair of Eye-glasses that goes through our prescription department is subjected to the most careful examination of even the smallest details. Every lens is neutralized, measured and centred by two inspections. Every Eye-glass or Mountings supplied at the Peterborough Optical Institute is adjusted to the exact position before each eye and to fit pleasingly the features of the wearer. No matter how accurately the lenses may be ground and centred, if the pupillary width of the frame does not correspond with that of the eyes, there will be strain upon the motor muscles of the eyes, and consequently discomfort. We are most particular to adjust glasses to every detail in order to give greatest relief to the eyes and most perfect conformity to the features. This is one reason for our success.

We Go To SPECIALISTS
When we wish to have our teeth treated, do we call on the family physician or a nerve specialist? Not at all, we consult a man in the dental profession who has, by specialization on the organs of digestion and mastication, the proper scientific knowledge and skill to alleviate the sufferings produced by these particular organs. On the other hand, if our nerves are all unstrung and we are bordering on the verge of a nervous collapse, we give little thought to the dental surgeon and consult a specialist on neurosis. We should be just as careful who we have treat our Eyesight. The eyes are one of the most important organs of the body, and should be treated only by a Specialist.
We are Specialists in the correcting of all errors of refraction in the Eye. We do all our own Lens Grinding, thus assuring promptness and positive accuracy.

THE BLACK CROSS

By OLIVE M. BRIGGS

"Monsieur—Ah, Monsieur Velasco!"

He shuddered away from her. "You, is it you! Are you alive? I thought you were dead! Mon Dieu, I thought I was shut in with a corpse! It is frightful, horrible! I have suffered! God, how I have suffered—the torture of the damned!"

"Monsieur!"

"My hands are cut; I know they are cut! Look, can you see,—are they covered with blood? I am sure I feel it trickling!—Look!"

"No — no, Monsieur, there is no blood."

"I tell you I feel it—and my shoulder, my arm—I shall never be able to play again! I am ruined—ruined—and for what? Why did you come to me? Why didn't you go to someone else—anybody?"

"Ah forgive me, forgive me." The girl crept closer and laid her hand on his shoulder, pathetically, as if half afraid. "I shouldn't have gone to you, but listen, Monsieur—let me tell you—let me explain! I thought there was no danger, not for you, otherwise—Oh, do believe me, not for the world would I have done it! I knew you were an artist; Bobo told us you were going to Germany—I thought—Can you ever forgive me?"

Her voice broke a little and she was silent.

Velasco went on rocking himself, feeling his arms, his hands, his fingers at intervals. "Don't talk," he said, "You make me nervous. You did very wrong; you ought never to have come to me. I hate anarchists: I never could bear them; and now they take me for one! I shall live here all my days—and my Stradivarius, my treasure—Heaven knows where they have put it—lying on the platform of the station, or perhaps broken, or stolen! I shall never see it again, never! Ah, it is cruel—it is not to be borne! Don't speak, I tell you, I can't bear it! You shouldn't have coaxed me!—Ugh! these rats—brr—did you feel it?"

The girl gave a muffled cry. She had shrunk away in the corner, but now she crouched forward, her eyes dilated, staring into the darkness.

"A rat, Monsieur? Ah, it is so dark—I feel things, crawling—crawling: and the damp oozes down from the walls. I am frightened—frightened!"

The last words were a whisper; her throat swelled and she was choked, trembling with terror. She put out her hand and touched something soft—it slid from her and ran. She cried out faintly.

"Come here," said Velasco, "Come nearer! The rats won't hurt you. Rest on my cloak, poor child, are you cold? Where are you?—Let me touch you!"

"Here," said the girl, "I can feel the edge of your cloak; don't put it around me."

"Come nearer," said Velasco, "I can't see you in this devilish darkness. Are you crying?"

"No, Monsieur, no, let me tell you—it was your playing, your playing that night. I saw you, and then the thought came to me—I will go to him—he will help me; and then—I came.

"Your teeth click together like a castanet rattling," said Velasco. "You tremble like a string under the bow. Come closer. There—one ran over my sleeve, curse the creature! Did you feel him, the vermin? Put my cloak close around you."

"No — no not your cloak! You are shivering yourself, you need it. Don't I pray you!"

There was a moment of silent struggle between them.

"Keep still," said Velasco, "My hands are cut, but they are strong still, and yours are like wax, soft as rose leaves. Hold it around you, don't push it away. Now, lean against me; they won't touch you."

The struggle continued for a moment; then the form of the girl relaxed, her head drooped and he felt the light rings of her hair brushing his cheek. She started and then sank back again.

"Can you hear me?" said Velasco. "Perhaps there are spies, people listening; no one can tell. Put your lips to my ear. Why were we arrested, do you know? What have you done? Ah, these rats! Make a noise with your feet; scuffle as I do, that will drive them away."

"I—can't tell you," whispered the girl. "No—it was nothing, don't ask me. You will know in the morning."
